

5 July '12

Dear Nancy--

Thanks for taking a look at The Bartender's Tale for me. Poor old publishing is so penny-pinching these days that I have the distinct impression--actually, it's the hair on the back of my neck standing up--a cross-country plane ticket even for Diane's show is no sure thing. As I said on the phone, an East Coast business trip of my own might handle that barrier, come fall.

Things seem to be perking for the book--Publishers Weekly will run its interview of me, the hallowed two-pager, the middle of this month; my first in PW since Dancing at the Rascal Fair, for crying out loud. That reminds me to mention that Rascal Fair was the occasion of my first appearance on Diane's show--whew, 1987 that must have been--and unless I'm blanking, the only other time was for The Whistling Season in 2006. In 2008 The Eleventh Man was bumped by some national commotion, but other than the nice reader's review of Rascal Fair, that's been it.

Anyway, I hope you enjoy my bartender and son, whether or not it makes the show. And best wishes to the boss.

Sincerely,

p.s. My letterhead lags behind the email I hide under, my wife's: cddoig@comcast.net phone call to Nancy Robertson, producer of Diane Rehm show, June 26 '12:

--told her my publisher shows no sign of spending money for a cross-country book trip, but there's a chance (NY/Iceman?Wendy Smith-connected) I might be in Wash'n DC later this year, en route to N¹ on biz. If that wd help the book's chances, OK to send her a galley?

--absolutely, she said, although also saying nicely that she thought Diane is aware I have a book coming out and feels they've had me on the show quite a number of times. (They haven't, as I'll indicate in my cover letter) Send it anyway, she said, you never know. And let her know when I might be there, as another approach (not prime in my opinion, but better than nothing) wd be for me to be on a panel when they do one of their regular reader's review segments, and I cd get a plug in for my own book.

All in all, not a bad result from my initiative.