

Rob's daughters, p. 342

168: 1st born Ellen, '92, married, 1910? ^{3rd?}

184: '93, Judith "along toward their 2nd child"

Margery - '93 or '94? married, 1912?

Mary - 194

Dorothy - '95 : in 1914, 18th or so

The Barclays as an ensemble: their likeness, their force in Angus's life

Rob Barclay's offspring are all girls

--describe Rob's hands as they build the homestead cabins

(Walker Evans on Agee, p. x of Let Us...)

Rob was the stronger. (physically)

Rob's dam site/damn sight

Rob skeptical, disdainful, of American frontier craftsmanship--blacksmithing, for ex?

lame?
thin?

Rob did not think well of American wheels. "Ooy stuff" (comment about inferior wood used, for ex)

Barclayness

Rob uneasy about Angus's irreverence?

--connect to Angus's initiatives about sex, in Helena and in being the one to admit openly the lure of Lucas's Indian woman.

From my room next to his, I discovered that he was a roaring snorer, worse even than Grandma--godamighty, was I never to sleep again?--and in the morning opened my mouth to complain. Instead I laughed ~~at myself~~ and asked:

was I never to have a night's sleep again?

I at last dozed off in the snorting