I.I. Stevens killed Sept. 1, 1862, near Chantilly after battle of Manassas: what was Swan doing that day?

It makes no more sense to speak of "Indians" as a singularity than it does of "Europeans", Asians, etc. So, I will use "Indian" ~~xx~~ in frames of reference where "European" or "American" might be used--broad general designation--and use tribal names elsewhere.

WINTER

Name the valley wind that comes up the creek. (base on Murchie's Song of Sky)

WINTERING

Do a Skagit piece within the book--that is, let the bones of a reporting assignment, for Audubon or Search, show through as the day-by-day topics for a week or so? Describe scenes: river mouth, eagle refuge, dams.

alternative: Olympic rainforest story-within-story for NYT travel.

Visit to Home.

Begin with visit to library; when I began work on book about utopias, read every book in the section. Now there are new ones, including my own in purple glory.

Whatever the severing sentence, a mass chorus of husbandly farewells could have been heard in the gold-struck America of that moment. I reach down from a shelf a book that ^{makes account of} ~~counts~~ the excuse-makers on their way out the door for El Dorado. In 1848, before gold, the non-native population of California seems to have totaled fewer than fifteen thousand. By 1852, that figure multiplied to a quarter million, and James Gilchrist Swan long since in the sum.

Jul 29, 1862: This a.m. about 2 o'clock a steamer passed out, heard her wheels very distinctly.
