present a fair picture of an eclectic, baffling country.

True to his title, Smith uses the sharp quality of the Mediterranean light to help him 'illuminate' his subjects. Indeed, one of the strongest features of this type of light is its ability to give everything it touches razor-sharp delineation and a distinctly tangible texture. Smith never stoops to making images we've already seen. Each photograph is a small compositional revelation—every element in exactly the right place. Interestingly, there are no real "decisive moments" here; instead, what we are shown are those instants when people let down their guard to reveal themselves. All the potential stereotypes are here, the old men, the Arabs, etc., but Smith neatly sidesteps the pitfalls and delivers a view that is unique in its humanity. One look at this book will encourage most viewers to update their files, and rethink their notions.—Evelyn Roth

Inside This House of Sky: Photographs of a Western Landscape, photographs by Duncan Kelso, text by Ivan Doig, (Atheneum), 12 inches x 9 inches, 109 pages, 65 black and white photographs $27.50. In 1978 the Montanaborn, Scottish-American writer Ivan Doig published his autobiography, This House of Sky, a richly written account mostly of his youth in south central Montana. In Doig's detailed, pungent prose, that sprawling, high Western landscape and the dinky towns it dwarfs are as vividly portrayed as any character. The book became a near-instant classic of Western literature. Taking it as his text, Duncan Kelso twice travelled to Doig's country to find and photograph the writer's landmarks. The resulting pictures are accurate and sympathetic, but despite the accompanying snippets from Doig's book, oddly vague. This is a case of a picture being worth about 11 words. There is something to be done: get a copy of Doig's original and read it carefully, then spend about half an hour enjoying the scenes in this volume.—Charles McLaughlin

BUY 1 ROLL of Agfachrome® 200 Professional color slide film.

GET a $2.50 rebate on Agfachrome Speed print material.

With every purchase of Agfachrome 200 Professional, the unbeatable new high speed fine grain color slide film that gives you honest color rendition, natural flesh tones and rich detail—you get a special bonus.*

You will be eligible for a $2.50 rebate direct from Agfa on Agfachrome Speed print material, the revolutionary one-sheet, one-solution process that lets you make color prints from color slides in less than 2 minutes.

See your photo dealer today for this Agfa offer. It's unbeatable.

AGFA-GEVAERT
Preferred by those who know.

Agfa-Gevaert, Inc., 275 North Street, Teterboro, N.J. 07608 (201) 288-4100. Agfa and Agfachrome are registered trademarks of Agfa-Gevaert, Leverkusen/Antwerp.

THE ZONE VI CATALOG

32 PAGES OF QUALITY

ZONE VI STUDIOS designs and manufactures specialized photographic equipment, conducts a summer workshop program and publishes a Newsletter.

innovative design, exacting construction and expert service have made ZONE VI the preferred outfitter to particular photographers since 1972.

We manufacture many products and test them under working conditions. Their quality permits us to guarantee them unconditionally.

SEND FREE CATALOG

Name ____________________________________________
Address ____________________________________________
City __________________ State ______________ Zip ________

__ Send via Air Mail             __ Sample Newsletter

For RUSH SERVICE call (802) 257-5161

ZONE VI STUDIOS INC 38 Elm St., Newport, Vermont 05345
Happiness means sharing bright new days, and happy thoughts with a friend.

Dear Carol & Son,

Jan 27

The enclosed clipping tells the whole story except that I only was sweetheart many years ago. This summer I was in Montana. I met him while I was visiting Volga here in Livingston. I sent you an invitation but it was returned so I'm going to try again. I could have put your number wrongly or something. Volga said she had a Christmas card from you.

Ed & Ethel gave me the left Col. Montana magazine with your story & some family pictures in it. Imagine my campaign when I saw myself in that group of horse back riders. Yes that's me on the saddle on the horses being ridden double. Ruby Christian is behind me & my horses name was Twilight. One of my favorite riding horses.

I can identify most of the riders for you. The boy in the red was Mary Kent's. She helped ride at Shetys.
A letter from Minnesota. I think the name was Donald Shaw. The next little fellow is Archie Christiansen. I think you said to the one with the new looking cap. I believe the one with the horse face tased on his bridle is Claude. I think you said the one with the other little fellow is Angus. Angus and Charlie are riding my horse. It could be at a feed or at the home ranch by the round corral. The other group of men I don't recognise but I think your dad is on one end and Claude on the other. Could this have been the crew at the Higgins ranch? The group of boys is Claude, Angus, Charlie, Jim, and Charlie. The picture you spoke of with all the kids on the wood pile I have. I think you sent it to me. You also sent me a picture of one of your mother's birthday parties at Moss Agate with all the kids. Most of my brothers. Blewke the guy on the end of the jock is my Tyler. I'm only alone. I must have taken the picture. I really enjoyed the article. The picture I crossed it to a neighbor. Tyler's sister brother in law gave me your book of pictures.
Happiness means sharing bright new days, and happy thoughts with a friend.

A story of fifteen Ringling, FL 33 is the home ranch for a wedding gift. He enjoyed it very much.

I can't believe this weather almost the 1st of Feb our snow & ice is all gone. But the wind seldom stops blowing. Nebraska has had a rough winter lots of snow & ice.

Jo Ann is still near North Platte. Nell & Jim are crossing the Southern States in a trailer home. His & your marriage is in the process of divorce.

Ed lives here in Livingston. He's not very good. He's had 3 strokes. The last one took his right arm & into his brain. He is very hard to communicate with.

About 10 days ago, he fell & fractured an ankle but is getting around some. He will be 88 the 10th of Feb.

I hope this reaches you.

Love

Anna & Kyle.
My second letter came back so yesterday we went to Manhattan to see Elsie & Kendall & I got the address she had which was different than the one she had for years so will try again.

Joy Dailey got a bad burn on both hands from an electric wire about 10 days ago and has been in the Great Falls Hospital but Valga says he is getting along OK & should be home soon.

Hope this reaches you & would like to hear from you.

Love,

Anna
Anna Beetem, Lyle Essex married Nov. 20

Sterling United Methodist Church was the scene of the Sunday, Nov. 20, wedding of Anna E. Beetem of Sterling and Lyle Essex of Livingston, Mont. The Rev. Harold D. Backus officiated at the 2 p.m. single ring ceremony in the presence of 85 guests.

The bride was given in marriage by her children, James Beetem of Perham, Minn., and JoAnn Beetem of Maxwell, Neb.

Altar decorations were a gold cross, lighted candles and two arrangements of silk ivory and burgundy roses.

The bride was attired in an ivory crepe street length dress featuring a lace yoke and stand-up collar; lace also accented the cuffs of the long sleeves. She carried a colonial bouquet of silk ivory and burgundy roses with matching streamers.

Her wedding ring, a gift from an aunt, was a family heirloom.

JoAnn Beetem, maid of honor, wore a two-piece street length dress of blush rose knit jersey. She carried a matching long-stemmed rose.

The groom and his attendant, James Beetem, wore business suits and ivory carnation boutonnieres.

Orvene Wilson of Tecumseh provided the nuptial music. JoAnn Beetem sang.

The reception was held in the church fellowship hall. A three-tier wedding cake decorated with burgundy roses, and burgundy candles graced the serving table. Marvene Straube made all the silk flowers and baked and decorated the cakes.

Doris Sugden and Marjorie Zink were reception hostesses. The cake was cut and served by Mary Curtin and Irene Carpenter; Ottilia Cain poured the coffee, and Rosa Giesmann was at the punch bowl.

Waitresses were Darla Zink, Maria Carpenter, Melinda Welton and Glenda Borcher.

Patricia Heusman presided at the guest book; Michelle Gordon and Jackie Welton received the gifts.

Evelyn Klepper was assisted in the kitchen by Ruth Vermeer, Helen Sugden, Mary Reutter and Irene Thompson.

After a wedding trip, the couple will be at home at 122 South "P" St. in Livingston, Mont.
people.
mission that is more resident of the United the prestige of her ings. Developing our cher training pro-ife of another presiried up about this oke at our Colorado
’s meeting, and her n fight against ad-ugs brought home
and all-pervading ur doctor supplying ful health condi-
as for her to keep on ow easy it was, in-
; to drink, and she herself denied n, until her family
The courage of the woman was evident, as she stood before all of us, looking somehow fragile, and described her battle.
And she won!! That’s the great thing about this story. It is possible to win. She praised A.A. in the highest terms.
All of us have friends, I am sure, who’ve benefited from the program. One of mine talked to me recently about the absolute grace of being sober. “I get up in the morning and thank God,” he said. He talked about the awful befuddlement of his drunken days.
And he said if he had been aware of this possibility when he started, if he had known about the disease of alcoholism, he would have avoided many years of pain.
We’re talking about education. And we can do something about that. For ourselves and for our kids. We know what the enemy is. The abuse of the use of alcohol and drugs.
Let’s arm ourselves with the kind of weapons most effective, awareness and knowledge of what can be done, and let’s get about doing it. Wherever you live, it’s time to get involved.
We think we can be of assistance to you in planning your next vacation. Listed below are advertisers offering free booklets or brochures. All you need do to receive this material is circle the corresponding numbers on the coupon and return it to us. We'll do the rest!

2. CAMBRIDGE BEACHES—Bermuda's original cottage colony. A delightful palm-fringed resort comprising 32 finely appointed cottages scattered over 25 breeze-swept acres of the loveliest part of the Island. Choice of several private beaches; all water sports; golf and tennis nearby. Wonderful meals served on terrace above Mangrove Bay. Circle No. 2.

3. EXPRESSMANS TOUR OPERATORS—cruise the Turkish coastline and discover the legacies of three empires and 12 civilizations. Combined with dazzling natural endowments, they create an unexcelled cultural mix. Eminent lecturers breathe life into history. Circle No. 3.

4. HIGH HAMPTON INN & COUNTRY CLUB—once the summer home of Dr. William Halsted, this distinguished resort in the Blue Ridge Mountains is famous for its clientele and gracious hospitality. 3600 ft. high on 2300 acres. Golf, Tennis, Stocked lake. Skeet and trap. Children's programs. Circle No. 4.

7. MAUPINTOUR'S EUROPE—Oberammergau Passion Play, festivals/art treasures, British Isles, Greece/ Aegean Isles, Italy/Sicily, Spain/Portugal, the Alps, Scandinavia, Orient Express/ QEII. Grand Tour includes 11 countries in 29 days. Rhine cruise through Middle Europe or enjoy one-country in-depth tours. Circle No. 7.

8. THE RED LION INN—is one of America's oldest country inns, hosting New England visitors since 1773. Filled with antiques and famous for its fine food and traditional New England hospitality, the inn is open all year and offers outstanding, fully-equipped meeting rooms. Charming shops and Norman Rockwell Museum nearby. Circle No. 8.

9. TRAVELINE—combine the Greek experience with the Traveline experience for the most glorious vacation. You may choose among entire package tours, partial tours, combination tours, or any tour. Circle No. 9.

The Big Picture

INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY
Photographs by Duncan Kelso '63, text by Ivan Doig.
Athenaeum, 1983. $27.95.

Memory is our only true time machine. And of all the Proustian devices, the smells, sounds, and random tastes which aid us to recall the past, surely photographs provide the most dependable mechanism of all. The snapshot brings, if not total recall, at least the closest approximation to what it was like that sunny Fourth of July after the war when we were six and sat eating watermelon in our bib-overalls with all those other tow-headed chums on the kerosene-soaked front porch of McGrath's General Store.

It is not surprising that my memories of an upstate New York childhood should be different from Ivan Doig's recollections of growing up in White Sulfer Springs, Montana at about the same time. More than mere geography separates these extremes. Yet both our pasts are continually informed by a casual photographic record. His grandmother's family albums were at

Ivy League Alumni Magazines
P. O. Box 2869
Clinton, IA 52735

Please send the vacation/travel information corresponding to the numbers I have circled:

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

Name (please print)
Address
City State

Note: Offer expires June 30, 1984
La condition humaine

NO PLACE TO HIDE, 1946/1984
by David Bradley ’38.
Foreword by Jerome B. Wiesner.
University Press of New England,
1983. 217 pp., $18.00 cloth,
$8.95 paperback.

The most extraordinary thing about this wise, lucid, and beautifully-written book is that it has been so long out of print. First published in 1948, it met with instant attention. But then attention flagged: as T. S. Eliot warned us, “humankind cannot bear very much reality.” It is now republished with an even wiser, temperately-expressed, yet anguished, epilogue.

In 1948 David Bradley was a young medical officer assigned to monitor the Radiological Safety program at the Bikini Tests, “Operation Crossroads,” an extraordinary naval laboratory of radiological hazard whose findings (together with those of Hiroshima and Nagasaki) still offer us some of the most sombre data ever collected.

What is remarkable is this book is not the scientific evidence preserved in a daily “log” (even today some of the monitoring is classified as secret), but the fact that the event found, in David Bradley, a chronicler with the compassion and command of language to match its historical significance. It is the log of a poet as much as of a medical man. Monitoring radioactivity on the rocks of Cherry, a small atoll (“even the great Pacific itself cannot wash out a roentgen of it”), Bradley had time to pause and cast a reflective eye over the whole scene:

The lagoon side of little Cherry has more to tell of the Bikini tests than incidental radioactivity. There the full story of man’s coming is spread out on the beach: boxes, mattresses, life belts, tires, boots, bottles, broken-up landing craft, rusting machinery and oil drums, all the crud and corruption of civilization spread out over the sands, and smeared over with inches of tar and oil.

Bradley’s observant eye had time to notice these things: time also to notice the comedy of all great military operations (the vast difference between the pomp and professions “for the record” and the haphazard exigencies of execution), as well as the tolerant comedy of human relations within a military structure in which most of the performers felt themselves to be misfits playing roles.

Yet if there were roles being played, there was nevertheless, a dreadful reality as backdrop. Hiroshima punctuated history with a question-mark. No Place to Hide is balanced at that moment of questioning, and looks directly into the question itself. In his 1948 prologue, Bradley wrote: “Bikini is not merely a ravaged and useless little atoll deep in the Pacific. Bikini is our world.” The conclusions that he drew then, 35 years ago, do not require the revision of one syllable or comma today. He knew all about The Fate of the Earth, and he warned us about it then, although we did not listen. “It is not the security of a political system but the survival of the race that is at stake in the indiscriminate use of atomic energy for political coercion.” And the problems, as he listed them then, are those that tower above us today: (1) There is no real defense against atomic weapons; (2) There are no satisfactory countermeasures and methods of decontamination; (3) There are no satisfactory medical safeguards for people of atomized areas; (4) The devastating influence of the Bomb and its unborn relatives may affect — through radioactivity — the land, and its wealth and people, for centuries.

To have seen this, in 1948, might seem to have left David Bradley with little more to say in his Epilogue of 1983. Yet he has found the words for the historical moment once again, and has shown that the poet still co-exists with the doctor. The simple, powerful images which display the human predicament — “a solitary spark, so far as we know, among the numberless lights and queer electrical sounds of black space” — summon us once again to
Our Four Diamond AAA award for superiority

PLUS OUR FOUR C's:
- comfort
- convenience
- courtesy
- cleanliness

are evidence of our exceptional accommodations.

Make a reservation and let us show you the finest in country hospitality.
- Indoor pool, sauna, game room, lounge, and 24-hour restaurant.
- For reservations call 1-802-295-3015 or 1-800-654-2000

HOWARD JOHNSON’S motor lodge
I-89 and I-91 White River Junction, Vermont 05001
Just minutes from the campus.

Doig’s side when he came to write his haunting reminiscence This House of Sky. And now the memories have come full-circle. Photographer Duncan Kelso has journeyed to the scenes of Ivan Doig’s Mahegan County boyhood and captured a part of Montana which seems changeless and eternal.

Appropriate quotations from This House of Sky serve as captions for many of the pictures, but I don’t wish to speak here of that remarkable book— I’ve already given it that ultimate thumb-nail review: a dust-jacket blurb. In any case, Duncan Kelso’s book is not merely an extension of Doig’s. His handsome photographs easily stand on their own without any association with the other man’s work. I can vouch for the authenticity of the varying moods they capture for I know the country. I lived for a dozen years in neighboring Park County and have often made the drive to White Sulfer up the Shield’s Valley along the narrow asphalt ribbon of U.S. 89. Many of Kelso’s images form a part of my own memory: a starkly beautiful weathered and boarded-up church on a hillside overlooking what’s left of Ringling, the vivid white crosses punctuating the highway like miniature headstones wherever reckless driving claimed another fatality, lonesome log homesteads, abandoned and roofless among the sage-choked draws. I know these places, and through the magic of Kelso’s lens, you will, too.

The shots of Ringling are particularly telling. The remnants of a town named for a circus owner are scattered along the single track of the electric train that once hauled hay grown locally to feed big top elephants and trick ponies. When I first saw the place, it was little more than a collection of ruins and trailer homes. All that was left of the bank was the iron vault, standing like a sentinel above the rubble. The sole surviving business was a tiny bar dwarfed by a glittering mountain of empty beer cans heaped out back. Richard Brautigan, Jimmy Buffett, and I stopped here for a drink ten years ago on a fishing trip to the Smith River. Buffett’s memorable song (“Ringling, Ringling, fading away . . .”) and Kelso’s vivid photographs are a more eloquent testimonial than most ghost towns ever receive.

Montana is in so many ways a monochromatic landscape that Kelso’s duotone prints seem entirely appropriate. The mood he captures of drifting shadows and sunlight piercing a ragged
Ten Days That Will Make A Difference

- Verbal Skills: Rank beginners will be able to acquire adequate communication skills, while more advanced students will find it a perfect refresher course.

- Cultural Understanding: Participants will be able to become acquainted with the heritage of a different society through dramatic and other action-oriented techniques.

- Human Understanding: The cultural components of the programs will be further enriched by the realization that participants will have learned to communicate better with people around them, be it family, friends, business associates or fellow "Alpinists."

- Total Involvement: We promise everybody a chance to get totally involved — intellectually and emotionally — in an entirely different environment, as was the case for the participants in the first two ALPS programs and for thousands of Dartmouth students and others who have learned a language through the Rassias Method. At present the Method is being used in approximately 120 colleges and high schools throughout the country, as well as in Africa, Asia and Europe. Teachers may find in these courses an opportunity to upgrade language skills and cultural awareness, while acquiring the elements of the Rassias Method.

Tuition and Fees

(includes room and board unless otherwise indicated)

Table: Per Person

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Category</th>
<th>Fee</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>'74 and prior</td>
<td>$795</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'84-'75</td>
<td>$635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Young people (16 years and over)</td>
<td>$635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Day students (tuition only)</td>
<td>$485</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dartmouth faculty and staff (tuition only)</td>
<td>$385</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

A small fee will be charged for instructional materials.

Space is extremely limited. Please apply early. Deadlines for registration:

- Session 1: May 15th
- Session 2: May 30th

We reserve the right to cancel any portion of the programs in case of insufficient enrollment. Registration fees will be refunded. For further inquiries, contact Micheline Lyons, Assistant Director, Language Outreach (LORE), Dartmouth College, (603) 646-3719.

Mail registration form along with a non-refundable fee of $50 per person to be applied to the total charges made payable to:

Language Outreach — ALPS III
Dartmouth College
Hanover, NH 03755

Registration Form

Please reserve ____ places in ALPS III.

My name:

College and class:

Occupation:

Language:

- Level: [ ] Beginning (B)
- [ ] Intermediate (I)
- [ ] Advanced (A)

I will be attending with:

- [ ] Spouse
- [ ] Guest
- [ ] Children

Spouse or guest’s name:

College and class:

Occupation:

Language:

- Level: [ ] B [ ] I [ ] A

Child’s name:

Age:

Language:

- Level: [ ] B [ ] I [ ] A

My address:

- Street:
- City:
- State:
- Zip:
- Telephone:

Dartmouth affiliation:

- [ ] Graduate
- [ ] Relative
- [ ] Friend
- [ ] Staff

Prior attendance:

- [ ] 1983
- [ ] 1982

Campus option:

- [ ] On-campus accommodation
- [ ] Single room (if available)
- [ ] Day student

Trip abroad:

- Country:
- Number in party:
storm-gray sky to highlight random hills is exactly right. But, if one were to find any fault with the book, it would be to wish for an occasional color shot to emphasize the subtle palette with which the countryside is imbued; the tawny, lion-colored hills of summer, vivid scarlet and silver lichens splotching the granite outcrops, the brief golden moments of the aspen groves in autumn. It is to Kelso’s credit that his art suggests these nuances even though limited to black and white.

One other small complaint: I was bothered that the book is unpaginated and that there is no index giving the location of each photograph. Although I am familiar with the area, I realize that most readers will not be, and a more precise catalogue would have been helpful. But these are minor irritations compared with the overwhelming beauty of Duncan Kelso’s work. One picture is said to be worth a thousand words. This review is not quite that long. So much for the title page. There are 63 more pictures in the book and I’ve run out of space.

William Hjortsberg ’62

William Hjortsberg, author of Falling Angel and other novels, is currently in England working on “Legend,” a film for which he has written the script. Most of the time, though, he’s in Montana.

Dartmouth Authors

Alan R. Booth ’56, Swaziland: Tradition and Change in a Southern African Kingdom. Westview Press, 1983. 156 pp., cloth. Professor Booth, who teaches history at Ohio University, has written a vivid account of the past and present of a little-known country — about the size of Connecticut, rich in natural resources, perched between South Africa and Mozambique, with most of its population in chronic poverty. Much of the book, the final section “The Pressures of Modernity” especially, benefits from Booth’s first-hand experiences living in the country as a Fulbright lecturer at the University College of Swaziland and during other study visits.

Robert D. Haslach ’68, Netherlands World Broadcasting. Miller Publishing (Media, Pa.), 1983. 105 pp., paperback. Anyone who has ever enjoyed finding out what’s to be heard on the international shortwave radio bands knows the word Hilversum, the town in Holland from which Radio Netherlands transmits its programs. And anyone who stops to listen at that wavelength knows that Radio Netherlands is one of the very best broadcasting organizations in the world. Robert Haslach worked for Radio Netherlands for five years, not long after he graduated from WDCR, and has written the best available history in English of an exemplary institution.

Peter Klinge ’59 and Sandra Klinge, Evolution of Film Styles. University Press of America, 1983. 277 pp., paperback. This is a densely-argued book which takes as its point of departure the fact that “film is a means of communication that has an order and syntax of its own, and which, if it is to succeed, must be based on the selective use of symbols that appeal first to the senses, and second to the intellect.” Russian and German Expressionism and the developing film-making traditions of France and Italy receive special attention. Dr. Klinge teaches in the communications program at Ithaca College.

David G. Muller, Jr. ’70, China as a Maritime Power. Westview Press, 1983. 277 pp., cloth. The author, a U.S. Navy lieutenant commander currently assigned to the Office of Naval Intelligence, has written the first comprehensive study of the maritime aspects of China’s place in the world, describing and documenting her rise to strategic and economic power at sea since 1945. The last sentences of the book suggests the importance of its subject matter: “In the past, sea power was indeed irrelevant to China’s pursuit of its national objectives. In the future, sea power will be a primary means by which China will strive to achieve them.”
Undergraduate Chair
by Monica Louise Latini '84

The Price of Art

Saturday mornings were made for art. They somehow always seem to be the sunniest time of the week. For five straight days I lock myself in a library. Finally Saturday arrives. There are minimal obligations and work can always be postponed until the bells toll on Sunday reminding me that Baker Library is still an integral part of my life. Lying in bed, I recall some anxious weeknights. I remember the blank feelings I received from my stark ceiling — the whiteness broken only by an ugly, plaster-encased wire running the most indirect route around the room, providing the bulbous institutional fixture in the center of the ceiling with electricity. The intense ugliness of what I see above me contrasts sharply with the beautiful sunshine streaming in the window. A vision of what I could be looking at flashes through my mind. I climb out of my six-foot loft, a personal addition to my standard dormitory room which would have made Michelangelo jealous, and grab my watercolors and a cup of water before the vision eludes me.

P.J.'s make an excellent outfit for artistic adventure. The smocksiness of them takes one back to a time when artists were unkempt characters living in shabby Montmartre studios. A pile of clothing on the floor belonging to both me and my roommate supports the fantasy.

The first stroke of the brush transforms the oppressive ceiling into a giant canvas. There is no feeling of constraint, for there are virtually no boundaries. One idea may inspire another, figures may multiply and scenery may become expansive without the fear of paper running out. If an edge is reached, a mere 90-degree turn of the brush extends the canvas by another 96 square feet.

Eventually, the inspiration fades. It's time to put away the paints, for forced inspiration is contradictory. After a cheerful cleanup and shower, I'm ready to go out into the sunshine. I know I'll pay for my spontaneity later in the Housing Office, but life is full of trade-offs.

"Monica, did you get the note from Housing today?"

My roommate looks at me accusingly over her Marx-Engels reader. She's been through this before. She's thinking of the fines involved. Because of these fines, she resents my creativity.

"Yes, Linda. Don't worry. I'll go talk to that guy in the Housing Office this afternoon."

Later on that day, "that guy" assumes the respectful title of Mr. Myron Cummings — a man who knows both me and my paintbrush well.

Dartmouth stresses the need for a liberal arts education and then denies its students the same. For example, only eight of the thirty-six art courses offered — not including "advanced work in..." courses — are visual studies courses. Yet, even this number is deceptively low. One of these courses requires three prerequisites, all from the remaining seven. Considering that most students take only thirty-three courses as an undergraduate, this situation severely limits the number of students who are able to take these courses without committing themselves to either a straight or modified art major.
Photography

Reviews by Lona O'Connor

PIONEERS OF SOVIET PHOTOGRAPHY, by Grigory Shudakov; Thames & Hudson, 256 pages, $40; A splendid catalog of Soviet life and historic figures, 369 black and white photos. The book includes almost 100 photographs by the noted Soviet painter-turned-photographer Aleksandr Rodchenko whose landscapes, abstracts, photomontages, even his portraits show an experimental streak and avant garde style. The beautiful cover portrait is of his mother. A bonus: each section of the book begins with the work of famous Soviet poets.

SIGNS OF LIFE, by Alfred Appel Jr.; Knopf, 201 pages, $30 hardback, $16.95 paperback: A thought-provoking combination of movie stills and some of the most adventuresome American photography of the last 40 years, 197 black and white and color images of American fantasies, heroes and everyday images. Although the author's commentary often heads into the outer limits of erudite crypto-babble, on the whole it is an unusual perception of American life, using the images as a jumping-off place.

INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY, photographs by Duncan, Kelso, text by Ivan Dolgo-Athenaeum, $27.50: Photographer and writer collaborate in a loving paean to the state of Montana. Kelso's vision of the state, all in black and white photographs, makes it at once stark and stunning, a place which invites lifelong devotion.

The shining roof of an old homestead is all but swallowed up in the dark prairie, all loneliness and rolling beauty; in a similar composition, four white crosses, memorializing highway deaths, glow along the roadside beneath an unending western sky: Kelso's landscapes are far less polished than the western scenes of Ansel Adams, and therefore far more moving and melancholy.

ALL MANKIND: Photographs from the Christian Science Monitor, The Christian Science Publishing Society, 190 pages, $24: Four outstanding Monitor photographers, Gordon Converse, Norman Matheny, Peter Main and Barth Falkenberg, share their work from around the world.

Their gentle, uplifting vision mirrors Mary Baker Eddy's goal for the Monitor: "To injure no man, but to bless all mankind."

The collection, 154 beautifully-reproduced black and white photographs, was published for the Monitor's 75th anniversary.

DEAD TECH: A Guide to the Archaeology of Tomorrow, photographs by Manfred Hamm, text by Rolf Steinberg; Sierra Club Books, 132 pages, $14.95: Hamm and Steinberg present a beautiful but disturbing view of the grotesque monuments we leave behind: empty, steel and stone landscapes full of useless machinery. The long-deserted gun cupolas of the Maginot Line; the already-outmoded launch sites at Cape Canaveral; the still radioactive, abandoned cooling towers of Three Mile Island: all would be comical if we were not our earth they clutter. Steinberg's commentary adds a thorough historical perspective.

The beautiful paradox of Manfred Hamm's photographs is that they convey grandeur in abandonment. Any one of them is striking enough to stand alone as landscape art.

Lona O'Connor is a Free Press staff writer.
Western Books in Brief

These books may be purchased from your local bookstore. AMERICAN WEST does not sell them.

The Drawing of America: Eyewitness to History by Marshall B. Davidson (Harry B. Abrams, New York, 1983; 256 pp., illus., biblio., index, $49.50).

Works on paper in various media—over 300 of them—fill this winsome, oversized volume of American history. Beginning with allegorical images of the newly discovered continent and moving through the opening of the frontier to visions of our future, Davidson explains the artists' shorthand, telling of the times and inspirations for these drawings. The works of both sophisticated artists of reputation and unknown, unschooled amateurs make the entire story a delight.

This exotic title befits the colorful, delightful account of Erma Fisk's five-month hermitage in the Baboquivar foothills of Arizona. At seventy-three, with an "arthritis shoulder and gimpy hip," this spunky bird-tagger bore the hazards of wearing bifocals on rocky ground and navigated peacock droppings, while recording with lambent wit the wonder of her natural surroundings. While cattle tore mist nets intended to catch birds, Fisk banded, weighed, measured, and examined these aviators for molting, plumage, and parasites. A table of the various birds handled is included, but the fascination of her journals and letters rests in the light-hearted musings about the world around her.

Seashore Life of the Northern Pacific Coast: An Illustrated Guide to Northern California, Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia by Eugene N. Kozloff (University of Washington Press, Seattle, 1983; 378 pp., illus., gloss., biblio., index, paper $19.95, cloth $40.00).

An impressively thorough and well-organized examination of marine life on western shores from Vancouver to Monterey Bay, this work begins with a thoughtful chapter entitled "Instant Zoology and Botany." The author identifies the most common varieties of cnidarians, echinoderms and other phylum you've never heard of, as well as the more familiar mollusks, crustaceans, and sponges. With nearly 300 color photographs and 400 black-and-white illustrations, you can identify hundreds of intriguing sea animals and plants, including some astoundingly beautiful simple life forms.

Inside This House of Sky photographs by Duncan Kelso, text by Ivan Doig (Atheneum Publishers, New York, 1983; 112 pp., illus., $27.50).

Ivan Doig's This House of Sky (1978) inspired Kelso's striking photographic tribute to that work and the magnificent land of Montana. Sensitively composed scenes of town and country evoke that awe we feel when standing before the splendor of nature. Passages from Doig's text are coupled with the photographs.

Standing by Words: Essays by Wendell Berry (North Point Press, San Francisco, 1983; 224 pp., paper $10.00, cloth $20.00).

In six essays, Wendell Berry contemplates the moral and artistic aspects of language in poetry and in daily life. He believes that language today is becoming increasingly meaningless, increasingly irresponsible—and he perceives this as just one aspect of the disintegration of family and community.

More than two hundred stories vividly depict the sometimes humorous, but more often grim encounters between human beings and bears in our north country. As told to the author, these stories describe the annoyance, fear, and horror of people confronted by bold pests and enraged beasts. The serious accounts should be warning not to take these unpredictable creatures lightly.

Conversations with Wallace Stegner on Western History and Literature, by Wallace Stegner and Richard Etulain, fore. by Norman Cousins (University of Utah Press, Salt Lake City, 1983; 207 pp., illus., index, $15.00).

In this exchange writer Wallace Stegner reflects on Western history and literature, the Mormons, his own life, the wilderness West, and what is left of the West. The pleasure of these conversations, whether or not you have read Stegner's works, lies in the perspicacious insight and humanity that pervades Stegner's remarks.
SOMETHING GOOD FOR A WINTER’S EVENING...

Beyond the Vertical. Layton Kor. Edited by Bob Godfrey. Alpine House. $35.00

As climbing books go, this one was a real surprise—a pleasant one, I might add. Layton Kor, one of the best climbers to come on the scene in the sixties, for the most part avoided the limelight and pursued his climbing like a man possessed. The coffee table format is the perfect setting for the excellent photographs, which give a visual narration to the unique text. Most of the pictures are of extreme climbing in spectacular settings: Yosemite’s El Cap, the diamond on Longs Peak, Eiger in winter, just to name a few. Perhaps the most striking and beautiful shots are in the American southwest, as exemplified by the cover. The remarkable thing is that these photographs, though twenty years old, are as well composed and exciting as any of more contemporary climbs.

Layton Kor, by all accounts a private person, was solicited by the editor to write a book of his climbs, which to him were a thing of the past. The text leans heavily on accounts by many of his partners, who are practiced authors. This produces an uninitiative style of biography/autobiography which offers pleasant reading, often capturing the nature of scary committing climbs. The contributing authors read like a who’s who of the sixties: Royal Robbins, Yvon Chouinard, Steve Roper, Fred Beckey, Chris Bonington, Galen Rowell, just to name some.

With all the beautiful pictures and readable text, one comes away from Beyond the Vertical with a better understanding of what the goals and characters were in the sixties, but for me Layton Kor still seems remote. Kor used climbing as a vehicle for his spiritual search, and he finally gave it up when he found family and the Jehovah’s Witnesses offered a focus for his tremendous energy and enthusiasm for life. The Kor of today is not Kor the climber whose climbs stand in testimony to his energy and tell a story for all who can accept some of the challenges he so fully embraced.

—Rich Carlstad

Mountains of North America. Fred Beckey. Sierra Club. $35.00 (Hardbound)

The Sierra Club has published a beautiful book in Fred Beckey’s Mountains of North America. For this large coffee table-sized book, Beckey has chosen images from among the world’s finest outdoor photographers to accompany text describing thirty-five of his favorite peaks from New England to Mexico, from the Wind River and Sierra Nevada to the St. Elias and Alaska ranges. While each chapter includes the inevitable long-range sunset-afterglow view of an individual peak, photographs of wildlife, flowers and the occasional human climber add to a fuller understanding of the environmental and historical setting of the peak. One striking shot is of a red fox crouched on a dark earth mound at the entrance to its den, with fireweed arching above. The contrast of the green foliage and dark earth heightens the intensity of the fox’s eyes and cocked ears. The fox is clearly aware of the viewer and is ready for our next move. The view of Mt. Rainier, which graces the cover of the book, captures the immensity of the mountain. Pictured through the tops of several evergreens, the grey and blue mass of glaciers and rock almost fills the page. Wisps of clouds are caught on Mt. Rainier’s summit.

Unfortunately, not all of the photographs are of equal quality. In some images, the colors are too intense to be natural and the printing of other photographs is slightly off, resulting in blurred or unusual images. Two peaks described in the text, Cline’s Dome and Harney Peak, are not pictured, although photographs of foliage, flowers and animals native to the peaks are included. If a peak is of sufficient interest to warrant a separate chapter, shouldn’t its photograph be included?

Beckey’s text includes geologic histories, tales of early exploration and summit attempts, and personal histories of encounters with each peak. The most lively sections are Beckey’s descriptions of his own climbs. Particularly interesting is his experience on the Devils Thumb in the Coast Range of British Columbia. After weathering a snow storm, sixty-mile-an-hour winds, and rains which dumped fourteen gallons of water in his tent, Beckey concludes: “…we had come to terms with Devils Thumb. We were living with the mountain…learning where the wind blew, where avalanches tended to slide.” When the party awoke to bright sunshine, they completed plans for the final attempt on the summit. In Beckey’s words, “…we had become intense and dedicated.” In this mixture of understatement and romantic prose, the gains of this and many other summits is described.

Sections of the text are often repetitive and slow moving. Descriptions of the geologic history of the peaks are included in each chapter. Consequently, the broad geologic events which created most of the peaks in western America are repeated in several chapters. The details of description is not sufficient to make the individual history of a peak clear, and the repetition distracts from the enjoyment of the book. Other sections seem strangely out of place in this book. One such sec-

DECEMBER, 1983  The Mountaineer  Page 5
Harris, MacDonal d. Tenth.

Fed up with teaching music, Julian Coates has just dramatically quit when he's asked to do a BBC program on the unfinished Tenth Symphony of obscure modern composer Leverkuhn (of Thomas Mann's Doctor Faustus). The program's success earns Coates a commission for a performance version of the Tenth. As he struggles with the sketchy notes left by Leverkuhn and his own feelings of inadequacy, Julian is also beset by romantic intentions—of his live-in student, Leverkuhn's daughter, and a neurotic radio producer. Harris creates a plausible situation and then overwhelms it with unnecessary sexual and other complications. The musical background is fascinating, the characters much less so. For large fiction collections only.—Shelley Cox, Southern Illinois Univ. Lib., Carbondale Kelsor, Duncan (photogs.) & Ivan Doig (text). Inside This House of Sky.

This book is an attempt by Duncan Kelsor to capture in photographs the feeling and power of the Montana landscape as evoked in Ivan Doig's critically acclaimed memoir This House of Sky. The present book is divided into several sections, each illustrating a particular aspect of the Montana countryside and prefaced by a passage from Doig's book. Unfortunately the effort falls short of the mark—principally because the pictures fail to convey the strong personal impressionism of the readings. The cumulative effect of the photographs is one of the impersonal stark desolation. As landscape photographs they are neither technically nor visually remarkable. Despite this, the book will probably be of regional interest. Recommended only for larger collections.—Frank Schroth, Edna Stein Acad., Brookline, Mass.
Photographers Showcase Their Arts

By MILDRED LADNER
World Book Editor

The holiday season traditionally produces a clutch of books that provides a showcase for photographers. This year there are some new angles on the century-old craft which becomes more high tech with each passing decade.

Consider “Swiss Panorama” by Emil Schulthess (Knopf, $50), which contains 28 full-color photographs ranging from double-page spreads 26 inches wide to four-page double gatefolds spanning more than four feet when stretched away from the binding.

Switzerland's fairy tale villages and spectacular mountain vistas make it a perfect choice for Schulthess's aerial photography. Using a panoramic camera suspended from a helicopter, he photographed the Swiss scenery in vast sweeps of from 226 to 360 degrees. Accompanying essays on techniques used and descriptions of the areas covered are printed three columns to the page in German, Swiss and English.

From the camera of Eve Arnold, author and photographer of “In China,” comes a celebration of her native land, “In America,” (Knopf, $35.)

From the cover picture — a portrait of an overalled Wisconsin farmer seated on a formal love seat beneath an elegant 19th century painting from his forebears' native Saxony — to a football game (Chicago Cubs vs. Atlanta), Ms. Arnold manages to convey the spirit of a continent-spanning nation, involving all ethnic groups in her storytelling photos.

"Each of us going forth in search of America would return with a different and highly personal America, influenced by his or her own background, psyche, personality and experience," writes the white-haired photographer.

"This is my America — that of a citizen returned after two decades of living and working in countries with different cultures from our own ...

"I saw the United States in fair weather and foul — its strengths, its weaknesses, its idiosyncrasies, its pleasures and its pain. I was overwhelmed by its stunning vitality and charmed by its beauty." These words apply as well to the product of Ms. Arnold's work.

In "Signs of Life" (Knopf, $30), Alfred Appel, Jr. indulges our fondness for nostalgia by reviewing the popular culture of America from the Depression years of the late '30s to the present through the use of 109 photographs.

Appel shows how to "read" each picture for a revelation of our lives and times. Many of the photographs will strike a familiar chord with those of us who followed the old Life Magazine.

Included is the work of such wellknown photographers as Richard Avedon, Edward Steichen, Helen Levitt and Walker Evans.

There is emotional intensity in Laurence Salzmann's photographs of "The Last Jews of Radau" (Doubleday, $24.95), with text by Aye Gursan-Salzmann. In the late 1930s, there were 8,000 Jews in the Romanian town of Radau. Six thousand of them perished during World War II, some in concentration camps, but most of them as a result of the hardships incurred in deportations to Transnistria.

Between 1974 and 1976, the Salzmanns in Radau on a Fulbright fellowship found only 240 Jews remaining in a population of 22,000. Most of them were elderly; the young emigrating to Israel. Their stories are told with sensitivity.

Ken Heyman celebrates family life everywhere in "The World's Family" (Putnam, $19.95), which contains only snatches of poetry to highlight his magnificent human interest photographs focusing on the ages of man.

"Inside This House of Sky — Photographs of a Western Landscape" (Atheneum, $27.50) was inspired when photographer Duncan Kelso read Ivan Doig's memoir "This House of Sky," a book nominated for the 1979 National Book Award.

Doig's captions evoke his memories of the vast, spare prairie and mountain country around White Sulpher Springs, Ringling, Dupuyer and Valier, the Montana towns of his childhood. The sharp contrasts of black and white photography convey the harsh beauty of the open land.

Jeanne Hamilton's photographs in full color make "The Care and Feeding of Stuffed Animals" (Abrams, $17.50) a charming gift book for all ages.

Glen Knape, an enthusiastic member (and probably founder) of STUFF, an anacronym for Stuffed Toys' Union and the Friends of the Furred, perpetrates all manner of delightful nonsense in his text accompanying the photographs of stuffed animals at home, at play, and even sick in bed (stuffed up?) but basically it is the whimsical Hamilton photos that sell this slender book.
Clean off your coffee tables. Here come the holiday photo-books. What follows are selections from the current crop:

Probably the most exciting new photo-book is Annie Leibovitz: Photographs (Rolling Stone Press, $35). Named Rolling Stone's chief photographer in the early 1970s, Leibovitz, in her inimitable style, seems to have photographed everybody who is anybody acting like they're nobody important. In this book, her first published collection of photos, we see a half-nude Lauren Hutton covered with mud; Bette Midler in a bed of roses, Debra Winger doing something unfathomable with a wolf, and Dolly Parton hammering it up with Arnold Schwarzenegger. Her photographs are often humorous, yet always riveting — lessons in simple composition and on-location lighting. Working through them always is an admirable familiarity between subject and photographer. In these photos, Leibovitz brings today's celebrities down to earth, and makes them accessible to all.

In America (Alfred A. Knopf, $35), Eve Arnold's ambitious follow-up to her 1980 book In China, is a beautifully reproduced effort. In 161 color pictures, Ms. Arnold takes you on a visual journey from the Bible Belt to Silicon Valley, Klansmen to Shakers, city to country, rich to poor. The pictures aren't quite as awesome as the project's scope, but the book is a noble effort to capture the human tapestry that is America today.

Along photojournalistic lines, there is El Salvador: Work of Thirty Photographers (Writers and Readers Publishing Cooperative, $14.95). Edited by Central American photo-veterans Harry Mattison and Susan Meiselas, the book is chilling and otherworldly, often gruesome in detail. The 130 black-and-white photographs may lack a bit in style, but substance seems to overwhelm every image in the book.

Out of another time, another conflict comes The Eyewitness History of the Vietnam War 1961-1975 by George Esper and the Associated Press (Ballantine, $9.95). Not exactly fit for your living room, the all-black-and-white treatment includes shots by Pulitzer Prize-winners Eddie Adams and David Hume Kennerly, and other AP staffers who risked their lives covering the war. With accompanying text by former Saigon Bureau chief George Esper, this gallery of men at war is a bargain.

All Mankind (The Christian Science Publishing Society, $24) is a collection of pretty innocuous pictures by the Christian Science Monitor staff. Covering years of work across the world by four of the paper's photographers, the 154 pictures supposedly adhere to the Monitor's goal "to injure no man, but to bless all mankind." Most of the shots bore rather than bless.

The Best of Photojournalism (Running Press, $12.95) takes a more universal approach in its rendering of the human condition. Compiled from more than 20,000 entries in the 45th Pictures of the Year competition sponsored by the National Press Photographers Association and the University of Missouri School of Journalism, the book is a first-rate presentation of last year's moods and memories through the eyes of our country's best newspaper and magazine photographers.

The World's Family, by Ken Heyman (Pound Press and G. P. Putnam's Sons, $19.95), is another follow-up to the immensely successful Family of Man book, edited by photo-guru Edward Steichen in the mid-'50s. The much-traveled Heyman gives us his compelling global view of humanity from birth to death — and everything in between.

As far as historical photographs, this season is represented by People Mostly: New York in Photographs 1900-1950, compiled by Benjamin Blom (The Amaryllis Press, $19.95 until Dec. 31, $25 thereafter), and Pioneers of Soviet Photography, by Grigory Shudakov (Thames & Hudson, $40). For the serious photo-historian, there is the hefty, 722-page Macmillan Biographical Encyclopedia of Photographic Artists and Innovators, by Turner Browne and Elaine Partnow (Macmillan, $45).

Now, for the true coffee-table giants, made to impress easily with their weight and width:

Exotic locales such as Kashmir and Kenya get their colorful Kodachrome due in Kashmir: Garden of the Himalayas by Raghuraj Singh (Thames & Hudson, $35) and Cradle of Mankind by Mohamed Amin and Brian Telly (The Overlook Press, $40 to Dec. 31, $50 thereafter). For photo-enthusiasts by the panoramic camera with its 360-degree view, Swiss Panorama, by Emil Schluetter (Alfred Knopf, $50) is made to order, with its 28 panoramic aerial views of Switzerland (including six double gatefolds, which open to a width of more than four feet). Inside this House of Sky, with photographs by Duncan Kelso and text by Ivan Doig (Atheneum, $27.50), is only for the greatest fans of stark black-and-white Montana landscapes.
Photography

Reviews by Lona O'Connor

PIONEERS OF SOVIET PHOTOGRAPHY, by Grigory Shudaakov; Thames & Hudson, 256 pages, $40: A splendid catalog of Soviet life and historic figures, 369 black and white photos. The book includes almost 100 photographs by the noted Soviet painter-turned-photographer Aleksandr Rodchenko whose landscapes, abstractions, photomontages, even his portraits show an experimental streak and avant garde style. The beautiful cover portrait is of his mother. A bonus: each section of the book begins with the work of famous Soviet poets.

SIGNS OF LIFE, by Alfred Appel Jr.; Knopf, 201 pages, $30 hardback, $18.95 paperback: A thought-provoking combination of movie stills and some of the most adventuresome American photography of the last 40 years, 197 black and white and color images of American fantasies, heroes and everyday images. Although the author's commentary often heads into the outer limits of erudite crypto-babble, on the whole it is an unusual perception of American life, using the images as a jumping-off place.

SKY, photographs by Duncan, Kelso, text by Ivan Doig; Atheneum, $27.50: Photographer and writer collaborate in a loving paean to the state of Montana. Kelso's vision of the state, all in black and white photographs, makes it at once stark and stunning, a place which invites lifelong devotion.

The shining roof of an old homestead is all but swallowed up in the dark prairie, all loneliness and rolling beauty; in a similar composition, four white crosses, memorializing highway deaths, glow along the roadside beneath an unending western sky; Kelso's landscapes are far less polished than the western scenes of Ansel Adams, and therefore far more moving and melancholy.

ALL MANKIND: Photographs from the Christian Science Monitor, The Christian Science Publishing Society, 190 pages, $24: Four outstanding Monitor photographers, Gordon Converse, Norman Matheny, Peter Main and Barth Falkenberg, share their work from around the world.

Their gentle, uplifting vision mirrors Mary Baker Eddy's goal for the Monitor: "To injure no man, but to bless all mankind."

The collection, 154 beautifully-reproduced black and white photographs, was published for the Monitor's 75th anniversary.

DEAD TECH: A Guide to the Archaeology of Tomorrow, photographs by Hanfred Hamm, text by Rolf Steinberg; Sierra Club Books, 132 pages, $14.95: Hamm and Steinberg present a beautiful but disturbing view of the grotesque monuments we leave behind: empty, steel and stone landscapes full of useless machinery. The long-deserted gun cupolas of the Maginot Line; the already-outmoded launch sites at Cape Canaveral; the still radioactive, abandoned cooling towers of Three Mile Island: all would be comical if it were not our earth they clutter. Steinberg's commentary adds a thorough historical perspective.

The beautiful paradox of Manfred Hamm's photographs is that they convey grandeur in abandonment. Any one of them is striking enough to stand alone as landscape art.

Lona O'Connor is a Free Press staff writer
The pictures of places and the places of pictures

In the glory days of the great cruise ships, my mother set off on a round-the-world honeymoon with a trousseau that filled a brace of steamer trunks—and a bridegroom who had discovered photography.

Years later, pursuing the family album, my sisters and I were both amused and mystified to find photos of my mother, their dates spanning nine months, posed reluctantly in front of every famous monument from the Taj Mahal to Trevi Fountain, in each picture wearing the same rather forgettable little dress.

It seems the voiles and linens spent most of the journey tucked away in those trunks while, in the interests of keeping cool and relatively crumple-free.

Reviewed by Beverly Bevete

In the glory days of the great cruise ships, my mother set off on a round-the-world honeymoon with a trousseau that filled a brace of steamer trunks—and a bridegroom who had discovered photography.

Years later, pursuing the family album, my sisters and I were both amused and mystified to find photos of my mother, their dates spanning nine months, posed reluctantly in front of every famous monument from the Taj Mahal to Trevi Fountain, in each picture wearing the same rather forgettable little dress.

It seems the voiles and linens spent most of the journey tucked away in those trunks while, in the interests of keeping cool and relatively crumple-free.

Reviewed by Beverly Bevete

Swiss Panorama by Emil Schultbeiss (Knopf: $5.95) is a state-of-the-art travel photography, and then some. "Thrilling," promises the publisher, "a visual treat, and for once the adjective is accurate. With his 360-degree rotation camera suspended from a hovering helicopter at up to 6,000 feet, Schultbeiss captured the sweeping panoramas of mountains and cities, fields and farmhouses, throughout his native Switzerland.

This is a library of aerial views that open to a width of more than four feet. It is like being deposited in Lake Lucerne or on the top of a snowy Alpine peak. Small survey maps accompanying each panorama identify points of interest.

Paris by John Russell, art critic of the New York Times (Abrams: $45), is an updated and expanded version of his 1960 book, dressed up with more than 300 illustrations—photographs, paintings, pastels—many in color. The foreword is a charming reminiscence of life on the Left Bank in the '60s by his wife, Rosemond Bernier, founding editor of L'Oeil Magazine and a Parisienne for 30 years.

Russell first saw Paris 50 years ago as an English schoolboy; he is saddened by some of the changes but still passionate about Paris, a city of self-renewing energy "not a mumified ville d'art, like Venice or Florence." While grieving for the disappearance of such things as open platforms on the green omnibus-es and the grandness of the Grandes Boulevards, he takes solace in what remains—the anachronistic arrogance of the Seventh Arrondissement, where "the ivy has more class than in other parts of Paris." The corner cafes in the Fifth where your neighbors may be a Russian laundress, a furrier, a wrestler and a professor.

Through the pages of Russell's sprightly and informative text, walk Flaubert, Balzac, Baudelaire and Josephine, Colette, George Sand and Sarah Bernhardt (photographed on her daybed, a polar bear rug at her feet).

Parisians, he says, are what they always were, and likely to remain so. "Although they are disagreeable to you, they are quite as disagreeable to one another."

All Under Heaven: The Chinese World by Eliot Porter with text by Jonathan Porter (Pantheon: $40) is a collaboration by the famed photographer, now in his 60s, and his Sinologist son. The title is the translation of a Chinese word, Pan cans, which is a way of looking at China as a place, a civilization and a nation.

This is a big, beautiful and thoughtful book, the Porters, through magnificent color photography and provocative commentary, explore the relationship between this historic civilization and its everyday culture and aesthetics. Eliot Porter shows us terraced rice fields, Jonathan Porter explains how the Chinese, caught "in the jaws of this geographical vise," developed terracing and irrigation to maximize production in a mountainous country where only 11% of the land is cultivated. Eliot Porter shows us a tranquil Mandarin garden; Jonathan Porter explains the origins of these mini-images of the natural landscape in the 12th-Century Song Dynasty, an ethnographic society.

Eliot Porter gives us mountains, Jonathan Porter tells us that, where once they were considered spiritual and aesthetic, a place for poet and recluse, in the People's Republic they are "physical obstacles to be conquered."

Porter writes of "two China's," China proper with its relatively homogenous mix and uniform culture, and the frontier regions of desert and steppe and mountains, nomadic and sparsely populated, but where herders have been seen of late tending their flocks from the seat of a bicycle. This is a society in which modern social concerns are not always compatible with ancient traditions, where there is both desire for change and a need to hold onto something traditional.

Nomads of Niger by Carol Beckwith and Marion Van Offelen (Abrams: $45) is a strangely compelling book about a rather obscure sub-Saharan tribe of Africans, the Wodaabes. Beckwith, an American photographer, lived among the tribe for 18 months, traveling with them by foot and by camel. They're an arid and inhospitable land with a dry season that lasts for nine months (Beckwith and Van Offelen, a Belgian anthropologist, have chosen to give a portion of their royalties to the tribe to help them through the droughts). The story of the Wodaabes is told as a narrative, the central figures are a herdman, Mokan, and his wife, Mowa, and their family. We learn that it is a polygamous society in which first marriages are arranged, but second, third and fourth wives are chosen for love or lust.
that he climbed a mountain "because it is there."

Long Island: People and Places, Past and Present
by Bernie Bookbinder (Abrams: $30) is much more fun than 264 pages on Long Island ought to be. Bookbinder, who is on the staff of Newsday and was one of the perpetrators of that sex-spoof novel hoax of the '60s, "Naked Came the Stranger," is a native son. Some may dismiss Long Island as a mere bedroom for Manhattan, but Bookbinder reminds us that it has a colorful past of Indians and Revolutionary War battles and whaling ships, and that it is the home of Walt Whitman, the duckling, Belmont Park, the U.S. Open tennis championships, Levittown and Jones Beach. Here, too, is the Great Gatsby's Long Island, playground of John Pierpont Morgan and Guggenheims and Vanderbilts and Whitneys. Many of the mansions at Glen Cove and Oyster Bay are gone now, or lead no-nonsense existences as public institutions.

Moira Anderson's Scotland by Moira Anderson and Nettie Martin (Salem House: $19.95) is a coy little travelogue by native daughter Anderson, who is sort of the Anita Bryant of Scotland. Along the way, she reveals her most embarrassing moment, describes her first meeting with the Beatles (the connection here is that Paul McCartney owns a farmhouse in Kintyre) and confesses that she digs her elbow into her husband's side when she sleeps. A awful lot of full-color pictures of Anderson posed in front of castles, cathedrals, etc.

The Great Railway Adventure by Christopher Portway (Oxford Illustrated Press: $12.95) ultimately disappoints, but there are sprightly moments in this English travel writer's chronicle of a lifetime of travel over the famous railroads of the world—the real Orient Express, for starters. Trains have taken him to such far-flung locales as Vladivostok and Mombasa and his compartment companions along the way have included a Turkish sheik, a British toddler "leaking through her nappy," a Persian lugging a large carpet and a Wehrmacht officer (the most unsettling of the lot since Portway was at the time escaping from a German POW camp). On a visit here in 1972, via Amtrak, Portway concluded that Union Station is "the best thing in Los Angeles and about the only edifice of any historic significance. The city is a nightmare given over entirely to the automobile." On the other hand, he found San Francisco "enchantingly beautiful with a humorous, rakish, slightly saxy air."

Inside This House of Sky, photographs by Duncan Kelso and text by Ivan Doig (Albemeum: $27.50) is a picture album, really, a collaboration resulting from Kelso's enthusiasm for Dog's earlier prose portrait of his Montana boyhood, "This House of Sky." Kelso photographed the places about which Doig had written, the plains where "the wind tries barbed wire for a harp." Dog's Montana comes to life in 65 black-and-white landscapes and skyscapes.

Look Back on England by John Burke (Salem House: $16.95; illustrated) is for the dedicated Anglofile. The premise: if it's London, this must be Westminster Abbey, but no one ever tells you anything about the non-monuments, the pubs with eccentric names, the paths that no longer lead anywhere, that the tools in an ancient cemetery once was a watchers hut where families of the deceased kept a vigil against body snatchers who would sell to medical researchers. "England is one vast open-air museum," says Burke, who is a novelist and historian. An intriguing concept. The going's a bit heavy here, but there's an occasional gem.

Cradle of Mankind by Mohamed Amin (Overlook: $30) is the Nairobi photographer's record of life in Africa's Great Rift Valley, far North of Kenya. Here, on the shores of Lake Turkana, man may have taken his first heavy step. The foreword is by Richard Leakey, one of those attracted to the scientific community that formed there after multiple findings of prehistoric fossils. In the early '60s, Drs. Louis and Mary Leakey's finds included remains identified as the 1.8-million-year-old hominid, a remote ancestor of the human race. An interesting volume, with some good photos, including a study of a flight of great white pelicans passing above a crocodile slumbering on a sand spit. The author fears for the future of the warring, nomadic desert tribes who inhabit the area; at last, he says, "time has caught up with the people it forgot."

An Orphan in Ho Chi Minh City (Saigon).

Across the South Pacific by Iain Finlay and Trish Shopard (Salem House: $17.95) is the travel log of free-lance journalists and their two children who, having survived a wretched English winter, decided to change a 15,000-mile journey to faraway places with warm climates. It doesn't seem to have been
All Mankind (Christian Science Publishing Society, $24) commemorates the 75th anniversary of the Christian Science Monitor with an album of 154 black-and-white photos by chief photographer Gordon Converse and three color plates. These wonderful pictures, as real pictures, but the world they portray is a world without fear, violence or suffering. Hope, not despair, is on the faces of the people of Asia and the Middle East. One of the most poignant portraits is that of a small Vietnamese boy, newly arrived at an orphanage in 1973. The orphanage is overflowing and, in case it is mislabeled, the "55" marked on the child's forehead identifies the village from which he came. A book that adheres to founder Mary Baker Eddy's stated objective for the Monitor: "To injure no man, to bless all mankind."

Anchorage and the Cook Inlet Basin (Alaska NorthWest, $14.95, paperback) is the quarterly of the Alaska Geographic Society, an illustrated travel guide. It's all here Anchorage, where "moose not an endangered species; salmon swim in downtown streams," flora and fauna, geology and geography, statistics and demographics.

The Gardens at Giverny: A View of Monet's World by Stephen Shore (Aperture: $22.50) is a rather esoteric but quite lovely little book with 40 color photographs taken by Shore over four years at various stages in the restoration of the gardens laid out by the artist in the 1890s. In a farmhouse at Giverny, a hillside village along the Seine 40 miles northwest of Paris, Monet lived his last 43 years. His flower gardens, carefully planned to bloom year-round, and his lily ponds were both his joy and inspiration. Monet's son, the property's custodian, the Institut de France; the gardens are now open to the public.

Kashmir: Gardens of the Himalayas by Raghbust Singh (Northwest, $35) is the work of a talented photographer born in Jaipur and now living in Paris. The 80 color photographs were taken during a dozen visits between 1965 and 1982 to the mile-high Vale of Kashmir on India's northwest frontier. Kashmir is changing today the apple industry is bigger than the sheep industry. The growers are likely to have telephone, cars and TV sets. But it is Singh's observation that the people have changed little. Through two Indo-Pakistan wars over their fate, "the Kashmiris did nothing. They remained true to their history as passionate spectators but halfhearted participants." Singh is an artist.

Mountains of the Middle Kingdom: Exploring the High Peaks of China and Tibet by Galen Rowell and Margaret Rowell (Sierra Club, $40, with a "limited" color book, $60) is a book that ranks for months on the best-seller list. In the words of one reviewer, "It is in a class with the works of Audubon and Ansel Adams."

Rowell has to explain. Indeed, despite the slightly off-putting title, it is not just for dedicated climbers. It is a book photojournalist of considerable talent and a veteran of 1,000 climbs. Rowell made four visits to China's mountainous West and brought back awesome color photographs of snow-covered peaks, "a vision of the scale of my experience," together with portraits of people going about the task of living in this isolated and rather forbidding land. Along the way, he recorded a few observations that, Rowell says, ensure he'll "never get a visa to travel in China again." Of the Tibetan monks, he says, "They would just smile in the face of the camera and their expression changed as their appearance." Rowell thinks of his journey as a rediscovery of territory earlier charted by men such as George Leigh Mearns, first to explain the Pleistocene fauna.

Masters of Early Travel Photography by Rainer Fabian and Hans-Christian Adam (Vendome, $50) is for that someone who has already gone through their attic or the closet looking for early photographs, for their friends, for their friends, for their friends. A book that adheres to founder Mary Baker Eddy's stated objective for the Monitor: "To injure no man, to bless all mankind."

The Wodabes, Beckwith, an American anthropologist, has written a bitter study of the Wodaabe tribe of herders, a group of herders, that has lost its way. He has been working for 18 months among the Wodaabe tribe of herders with a group of herders, that has lost its way. The story of the tribe as a whole is described in the book the Wodaabe, a people in a land of droughts. The story of the tribe is told as a narrative, the central figures being a man, his wife, and their son. The Wodaabe are described as a tribe that has lost its way, that has lost its way, that has lost its way.
Ivan Doig's love for a transplanted home

"All the obliques of our valley life seemed to have been erased and redrawn here as ruler-edged plateaus of grassland, arrowed roads of grainfield, arrowing roads, creeks nosing quick and bright from the Rockies..."

— Ivan Doig, "This House of Sky"

SEATTLE — This house of Ivan Doig's in Seattle sits under a gray sky, its twisted, cramped suburban neighborhood incongruous with the psyche of a writer native to the expansive, Big Sky country of Montana. Yet Doig's smiles remain as broad as summer prairies. During the past five years he has accepted his increasingly respected position as a "Northwest" writer, having left his home pasture to handle — quite successfully — themes indigenous to nearby gray, rocky, fog-bound coasts.

Proof is in the awards that insulate the comfortable writing room he shares with his wife, Carol, who teaches communications at Shoreline Community College.

"This House of Sky" is an autobiographical account of Doig's youth in remote Montana, where he was raised by his widowed father and grandmother, who were shepherders. It was nominated for the 1979 National Book Award in contemporary thought.

The book won a number of Northwest awards, too, including the Pacific Northwest Booksellers Association Award. It was chosen as one of the 25 best books about the region and as one of the best five about Montana.

Though not a popular best-seller, the work brought Doig national recognition as a fine prose artist. He subsequently proved his worth in his haunting, "Winter Brothers," a non-fiction accounting of historical Port Townsend, Wash., and in his highly acclaimed first novel, "The Sea Runners," set along the Pacific Northwest coast in the early 1890s.

"Winter Brothers" was the subject of a public television documentary, and both books also were winners of the Pacific Northwest Booksellers Award.

Most recently, with photographer Duncan Kelso, a fellow Montanan, Doig published "Inside This House of Sky" (Athenaeum, $27.50), a black-and-white-photograph essay that discovers the essence of Montana in all its seasons.

The book includes an introduction by Doig, an essay from his first book to accentuate the photographs. The reader may be startled to find how closely the pictures match the words images Doig has planted in the mind's eye.

Now Doig is writing a second novel, and this time he returns to Montana, introducing a teen-age narrator and a plot set in the late 1830s, the waning years of the Great Depression.

"It's set in a fictional area of Montana that would be near where I grew up," Doig explains. "It's on the eastern base of the Rockies, between Glacier Park and Sun River. I feel it will be the first novel about Montana to be colloquially and historically accurate."

Doig, who has degrees in journalism and a Ph.D. in history, concerns himself with true depictions of the recent Old West. "This is a future of age story," he said, "and it is also a story of the people and the country."

That's enough of a plot.

An intense researcher, Doig uncovered a trove of Works Progress Administration oral history files in Bozeman and tried to catch up with vanishing oral histories of people still alive.

The novel actually is part of a series he has planned; the next will concern the generation of homesteaders that preceded his current novel.

"I'd like to write about all the generations of Montana. Time is running out for some who have some memory of the homesteading days."

Though underneath his insulated vest there beats the heart of a true Montanan, the 44-year-old author is quite comfortable west of the mountains. He visits Montana frequently, somewhat of a hero to the locals, and he says that being away from his home state actually sharpens his perspective.

"The last time we were there the people in Missoula welcomed him with open arms," Carol says, overruling her husband's modesty.

"Still," Doig says, "this seems the best place to work. I've written all my books in this house, and it's been very comfortable for me here."

The couple has no children, and they focus on each other's company. Doig writes without interruption (the phone answers itself) in the mornings, then takes a break and goes out for coffee, to see "other people" and to get some exercise. In the afternoons and evenings he often writes again, Carol, who shares his work space, meticulously edits his writing.

Doig is one of many good writers in the Northwest who work in almost splendid isolation, infrequently sharing thoughts and concepts, like polar bears rubbing noses on ice floes. All are as different in themes and styles as the Northwest's variegated regions, yet most have contributed work that is substantial.

Having these writers make their homes here is another advantage of living in the Northwest. Doig is one of the best.

Poet Alan Ginsberg — best-known for his once-shocking poetic litany, "Howl," and a contemporary of Jack Kerouac, Ken Kesey, William Burroughs, Lawrence Ferlinghetti and other survivors or non-survivors of the 1950s "beat generation" — will read at 8 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 12, in the Commons Building, Reed College.

Gary Gildner, who this year replaced poet Gary Miranda as writer-in-residence at Reed, has had a collection of his short stories — "The Crush" — published by The Ecco Press. W.W. Norton & Co. Inc. is distributing the book, released last month.

According to Gildner, the stories concern relationships people have with one another and with reality. The author has taught at Drake and Northern Michigan universities and has written under two grants from the National Endowment for the Arts.

Essentially a poet, Gildner has published several volumes of poetry and is a recipient of the William Carlos Williams prize.
Doig and Kelso describe Montana landscape.

“Inside This House of Sky” / Photographs by Duncan Kelso, text by Ivan Doig. Atheneum. $27.50.

by Larry Rumley
Times book editor

In 1978, “This House of Sky” by Seattle writer Ivan Doig described what it was like for a boy growing up in Montana with a minimum of material goods but a wealth of love. His mother had died, and he shared a home with his dad and his maternal grandmother.

The book won reader acclaim and critical acclaim.

Now Doig, with Duncan Kelso, Seattle photographer who also spent early years in Montana, has produced a photo-and-text portrait of the Big Sky country. Kelso, whose black-and-white photos capture the spare, at times bleak appeal of the state, said of Doig’s earlier book: “It affected me like no other book I had ever read.”

The 65 photos describe the open range land, the highways stretching to distant horizons, the whistle-stop communities that dot the land.

“Inside This House of Sky” is a happy meld of artistic talents and nostalgia for time past. Montanans, especially, should appreciate it.
French frenzy firing up

Every Nov. 16, truck drivers in Beaujolais, France, gather at wineries for a traditional meal of sausages, cheeses and fresh breads accompanied by the first bottles of Beaujolais Nouveau. Later that evening a gun is firing, signaling that it is time for the drivers to load up their trucks with the season's new wine and cart it off to buyers.

The first trucks to reach Paris are greeted by revelers waiting at their favorite bistros. Similar scenes are enacted at the arrival of the wine in London and New York.

So on Wednesday, Nov. 16, The Seattle Post-Intelligencer is staging its own French madness. It's a $125, black-tie, five-course dinner party at the museum to taste five new wines (Beaujolais Villages Nouveau, Georges DuBoeuf; Beaujolais Nouveau, Mommessin; Amyte Nouveau, Amyte; Beaujolais Nouveau, Nicolas and Nouveau Grenache, Ste. Michelle. Reservations: 447-4677.

CLOUDY DAY — Today's shaggy dog story, friends, deals with the drenching rain that pelted the Puget Sound area last Thursday, tying up traffic for miles and flooding storm drains. All names have been changed, but the incident set down is true.

Two friends were lunching in a downtown Seattle bistro. At 1 p.m., Man 1 returned to work, but Man 2 stayed on to have another drink. One drink became two, then three, etc., and at 4:45 Man 2 called Man 1. Come join me, he said.

In the heavy rain, Man 1 walked from his office, more than a block away, to the bar where he found Man 2 with glassy eyes. You can't drive, Man 1 said. You are sloshed. Wait here. Whereupon Man 1 returned to his office in the rain, gave his wife the keys to his car and said he would drive Man 2 home.

Back to the bar in the rain he went — to discover that Man 2 had taken off. So Man 1 returned to his office in the rain, only to learn his wife also had left for their home in the Newport Hills area.

An inspiration! Man 1 remembered a friend, Man 3, who also had been drinking most of the afternoon in the bistro. He called up the bar. Wait there, he said. I need a ride home. Through the rain again Man 1 hurried to the bar, only to see Man 3's car pulling away.

But Man 1 was undaunted. Quickly he hoofed it to another bar where some of his co-workers met at day's end. Sure, they said, we'll give you a ride home. But first, have a drink!

Upshot is that a sopping-wet Man 1 didn't get home until nearly 11 p.m., where he received a chilly reception from his spouse, who expressed some doubt about the authenticity of his alibi. "I took all of this (expletive deleted) just for trying to be a good guy," says Man 1.

Moral: Most people know when to come in out of the rain; they just can't find a way to do it.

DOIG'S COUNTRY — In 1978, Seattle writer Ivan Doig wrote a sensitive, searching memoir titled This House of Sky, a story about growing up in Montana that was nominated for the distinguished National Book Award in contemporary thought. Now he and Seattle photographer Duncan Kelso, who grew up in Montana, have brought together Inside This House of Sky (Athenaeum, $27.50), a photographic tribute to the Big Sky country inspired by Doig's memoir. It contains some fantastic landscapes of the mind for replanted Montanans.

OPEN WIDE — Dentists aren't widely known for handing out a lot of laughs while they're messing with our molars, but Dr. William C. Colwell, a North End oral surgeon, is an easygoing guy who seems to have a quip a moment. Colwell is one of five selected by the special committee of Washington State University alumni as a Dad of the Year, an award given to WSU grads or the fathers of WSU students.

In Colwell's case it's both. He and his wife were graduated from Wazzu in the '60s before he went on to further education and training at such prestigious institutions as the U of Maryland, Johns Hopkins U and Boston U.

Now their daughter Kristy is a senior psych major at WSU. Colwell, incidentally, specializes in oral-maxillofacial surgery, and as he says, "It's only fitting that we give you a dental.

TUBE SHOOTERS — An added attraction to Tuesday night's Seattle Supersonics-Phoenix Suns basketball game in the Kingdome is a halftime square-off between KING-TV personalities: sports reporter Carlos DelValle and Christine Currie, a reporter for the station's Saturday a.m. kid show, "Flash."

They'll participate in Celebrity Hotshot, a program designed to give exposure to Safeway/Pepsi's Challenge Hotshot, a national basketball program for 3½ million kids between 9 and 18. There may be no such thing as an underdog in the halftime tilt, but it's a chance to root for your favorite undercelebrity.
Camera safaris from the Victorian Age to latter-day America

PHOTOGRAPHY

Documentary and fine arts volumes dominate photography titles this month.

In America (Knoed, Ills.) by Ewe Adams. A handsome book of text and pictures of a two-century odyssey in photography, the book has been revised and updated for 30 years ago. It contains a wealth of information about the history of photography in America, from early daguerreotypes to modern digital images.

Inside This House of Sky, by Duncan Kiefer (Knopf). This is a powerful and moving account of the author's experience on a visit to Montana, where he witnessed the beauty and devastation of the natural environment.

Dead Tech A Guide to the Archaeology of the Information Age, by O. Knoed, edition. This book explores the history and cultural significance of early and mid-20th-century technology, from telephones to computers.

The Joy of photographic People, by the editors of National Geographic (Addison-Wesley). This book is a collection of photographs that showcase the beauty and diversity of human life around the world.

An arresting example from Masters of Early Travel Photography (Vendome, 1983):

PAPERBACKS

Peggy Constantin

S answers, titles for gifts for Christmas.

Knoed also offers four new titles in its Guides to American Antiques series. New titles, each $12.95, are: American Furniture; American Silver; American Tableware; American Art.

Other useful references books receipt at: Kentish, Robert, editor, Bonhams London, Ltd. The book lists all the auction houses for which the book has been issued.

There are many stunning reference books a recipient can choose from. For example, the book 'A New Book of Photography' by Robert Knoed has just issued two beautifully produced sets of tableware references. The first is a three-volume set, Master Guide to Birding, containing descriptions of all the species of birds of both the Americas. Each bird is illustrated with a photograph and the observer's notes are provided. The second volume, Master Guide to Birding, has been issued in a similar format, containing descriptions of all the species of mammals found in the Americas. Each mammal is illustrated with a photograph and the observer's notes are provided.

Budget picks for gourmets, bird lovers and readers of all sorts.

For short-story lovers, there are collected stories by V. S. Pritchett (Viking, $12.95), Great Expectations, edited by L. Rust Hills (Penguin, $12.95), and Mystery & Suspense Stories. The Year's Best, edited by Edward D. Hoch (Walker, $12.95). Short stories, edited by Irving Howe and Isaac Bashevis Singer, a collection of 35 tales from Yiddish to Garin Marburg.

For those who enjoy humorous and satirical views of the world, there are Donnybrook, Mike Royko's Slouching Towards Bethany Writer's Theatre Round the World. The book lists all the actors involved in the production of the show and the individual performances of each actor.
Duncan Kelso's photos focus on the landscape of central Montana

Photos capture 'House of Sky'

Ivan Doig fans should find a book released by the publisher Nov. 9 might be just what they are looking for. It's another king-size slice of Montana landscape, this time in photos.

"Inside This House of Sky" is a photo essay by Duncan Kelso, a former Montanan who was inspired by Doig's book, "This House of Sky."

Doig's widely acclaimed, prize-winning book in 1979 detailed growing up in White Sulphur Springs, Ringling, Dupuyer and Valier. Kelso pictures these areas in Meagher and Fondera counties. Sky abounds, of course, in the many stark, hauntingly beautiful shots. Doig's text is borrowed for the scant captions.

Doig also has provided an introduction to the new book. Kelso, like Doig, now lives in Seattle, but the men did not know each other before Kelso found Doig's "House of Sky," and its captivating text led him back to Montana where Kelso also once lived.

Kelso is a freelance photographer, writer and environmental planning consultant. He worked as a photographer for Boeing in Seattle for five years, has been published in magazines and shown in galleries, but this is his first book. The publisher, Atheneum of New York City, is asking $17.95 a copy for the hardcover book of 65 black and white photos. Central Montanans will delight in many familiar scenes, sights which could have been viewed in countless other Montana areas.

Doig was a ranch hand, newspaperman and magazine editor before he notched his first writing triumph, "This House of Sky." It is believed by some to be one of the five best books ever written about Montana. Doig's latest book, "Winter Brothers," became a public television documentary. His first novel, "The Sea Runners," was published in 1962. Another novel set in Montana is due in 1984.

Book lists critics' unkindest cuts
65 awesome skycapes and landscapes

This stunning book was inspired by Ivan Doig's classic prose portrait of Montana, This House of Sky. For this special new volume, excerpts from Doig's book have been paired with 65 magnificent duotone photographs by Duncan Kelso. Size 12" x 9".

INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY
Photographs by DUNCAN KELSO
Text by IVAN DOIG

THE CRAZY YEARS
PARIS IN THE TWENTIES
by WILLIAM WISER, author of Disappearances
74 Illustrations

SHORT CIRCUIT
Six Months on the Men's Professional Tennis Tour
by MICHAEL MEWSHAW

"One of the best... most timely... books ever written about tennis"
—George Vecsey, New York Times

"Wonderfully strange and funny"
—Chicago Sun-Times

Photo: 1982. David Gahr

"Bob and Ray are still radio's greatest comedy team. Their humor is as marvelous in these scripts as it is on the air."
—People

Illustrated

FROM APPROXIMATELY COAST TO COAST... IT'S THE BOB & RAY SHOW
by BOB ELLIOTT and RAY GOULDING
Foreword by Andrew A. Rooney

"The most shocking and intimate book ever written about a professional sport... a love song to the game of tennis and an indictment of the men who play it."
—Pat Conroy

SHORT CIRCUIT

"Wonderful, funny, lively."
—Dan Jenkins

"You just have to read Bob Greene, do yourself or someone else a favor, and buy this book."
—Michele Ross

AMERICAN BEAT
by BOB GREENE

"Bob Greene is a virtuoso of the things that bring journalism alive."
—Tom Wolfe

"Perfectly true of the times."
—Gay Talese
Magnificent panoramic photographs focusing on ages of man.

"Inside This House of Sky — Photographs of a Western Landscape" (Atheneum, $27.50) was inspired when photographer Duncan Kelso read Ivan Doig's memoir "This House of Sky," a book nominated for the 1979 National Book Award.

Doig's captions evoke his memories of the vast, spare prairie and mountain country around White Sulpher Springs, Ringling, Dupuyer and Valier, the Montana towns of his childhood. The sharp contrasts of black-and-white photography convey the harsh beauty of the open land.

Jeanne Hamilton’s photographs in full color make "The Care and Feeding of Stuffed Animals" (Abrams, $17.50) a charming gift book for all ages.

Glen Knappe, an enthusiastic member (and probably founder) of STUFF, an anacronym for Stuffed Toys' Union and the Friends of the Furred, perpetuates all manner of delightful nonsense in his text accompanying the photographs of stuffed animals at home, at play, and even sick in bed (stuffed up?) but basically it is the whimsical Hamilton photos that sell this slender book.
SEASON’S READINGS

The Fick of Christmas Gift Books
Edited by Tim Appelo

THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS, AND WHAT ALICE FOUND THERE

by Lewis Carroll, illustrated by Barry Moser
University of California Press, $19.95 until 12/31/83, $24.50 thereafter

Last year, Moser and the University of California Press won the American Book Award for the design of Alice’s Adventures in Wonderland, and the hearts of thousands of readers. Newsweek called Moser’s illustrations “as violent an antidote to Tenniel’s quaint realism as anything that Alice imbibed from a medicine bottle.” I happen to find Tenniel’s illustrations disturbing and excellent, and I like Moser’s very different, dazzlingly clear-eyed wood engravings as well. So no matter how you feel about the ancestral Alice, you’re likely to enjoy this one. The helpful, hip-to-Freud but not overbearing preface and footnotes are by James Kincaid. You can get last year’s Alice’s Adventures in Wonderland and the current Through the Looking Glass in a boxed set for $38.50.

As for the difference between the two Alices, listen to Kincaid: “Alice flings herself down the rabbit-hole and into Wonderland in May; in November of that same year she glides into the Looking-Glass. . . . Through the Looking Glass seems an immeasurably older book than Alice’s Adventures in Wonderland. For Alice, the story is a magic potion to ward off the stern wind of adulthood and death.” For Carroll, it is an attempt to ward off time, which steals his beloved young friends from him and makes them, then, adolescent, and remote. “There are few things in the world as enervating as a child’s love.” According to Kincaid, for Carroll “words are a catastrophic stay against loss, growth, forgetting and betraying.”

Keep this in mind as you read, and as you regard Moser’s 92 illustrations—remember that he has died Richard Nixon as the model for Dumpy Dumpy, and for the White Knight, one Lewis Carroll. —Tim Appelo

THE HERITAGE OF BRITISH LITERATURE
by Graham Greene, Anthony Burgess, Elizabeth Bowen, Lord David Cecil, and Kate O’Brien
Thames and Hudson Inc., $24.95

“Let me begin,” writes Kate O’Brien, “with the hard saying that the best English diaries have been written by born.” This provocative opening to the fourth of five essays in The Heritage of British Literature pretty much reflects the first-rate writing, the energetic and in some cases heretical thinking of its contributors. Besides O’Brien on diarists, we get Elizabeth Bowen on novelists, Lord David Cecil on poets, and Graham Greene on dramatists; the essays were first published during World War II. For this collection, a generous array of illustrations, etchings, photographs, and bookplates have been reproduced, and Anthony Burgess has been assigned the thankless task of summing up postwar English literature in the Afterword. The result is remarkably entertaining and educational—a kind of Norton Anthology without the literature, a truly satisfying fix for the insatiable Anglo-literary addict.

—Ann Searceh

Moser’s Humpty Dumpty new design for Through the Looking Glass.

INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY
Photographs by Duncan Kelso

This is not a reissue of Digg’s remarkable memoir of Montana, but a tribute to it in 65 duotone photographs. It is not every book that could sustain such a tribute; This House of Sky practically demands it. The landscape is full to bursting with the emptiness that stretches from the Cascades to the Plains, a terrain as alien to Seattleites as Mars. Kelso’s effort (with swatches of matching passages from This House of Sky shows that in describing Montana, Digg wasn’t just spinning pretty metaphors.

LOUIS WAIN’S EDWARDIAN CATS
Edited by Michael Parkin

Louis Wain was renowned throughout Edwardian England for his anthropomorphic portraits of cats. Said H.G. Wells, “Wain invented a cat style, a cat society, a whole cat world.” That world was the Edwardian one, tellingly depicted in this little collection. Parkin’s brief essay accompanying the 62 color and black-and-white illustrations is intriguing, the other distinctions, Wain created the Doig and Kelso describe Montana landscape.

“Inside This House of Sky”
Photographs by Duncan Kelso, text by Ivan Doig.
Atheneum. $27.50.

by Larry Rumley
Times book editor

In 1978, “This House of Sky” by Seattle writer Ivan Doig described what it was like for a boy growing up in Montana with a minimum of material goods but a wealth of love. His mother had died, and he shared a home with his dad and his maternal grandmother.

The book won reader acclaim and critical acclaim.

Now Doig, with Duncan Kelso, Seattle photographer who also spent early years in Montana, has produced a photo-and-text portrait of the Big Sky country. Kelso, whose black-and-white photos capture the spare, at times bleak appeal of the state, said of Doig’s earlier book: “It affected me like no other book I had ever read.”

The 65 photos describe the open range land, the highways stretching to distant horizons, the whistle-stop communities that dot the land.

“Inside This House of Sky” is a happy meld of artistic talents and nostalgia for time past. Montanans, especially, should appreciate it.
NEW YEAR'S DINNER • DANCING BE OUR GUESTS OVERNIGHT
DINNER SERVICE: 6:30
ALL TICKETMASTER OUTLETS
$19.84 PER COUPLE INCLUDES HOTEL
NIGHT $24.47

PARAMOUNT PERFORMANCES
DINNER • DRINKING
33 - pieces, directed

12.50 includes dinner $10
Masters of Early Travel Photography, by Raiger Fabian and Hans-Christian Adam (Vendome, $50). Arrogantly sure of his cultural supremacy, the white man went out in style to record exotic wonders in the latter 19th and early 20th century. The authors have augmented excellent photographs with informative historical and biographical information on Egypt, the Orient, Brazil, Greenland, the Middle East, and the American West, and the camera adventurers who brought them to Victorian parlors.

Inside This House of Sky, by Duncan Kelso (Atheneum, $27.50). There is a powerful lot of space and sky in Montana, and Kelso's stark black-and-white photos explore the vast, mysterious country that first inspired Ivan Doig to write This House of Sky, a volume that "deeply touched Kelso. While his vision is sensitive and the landscape impressive, the harsh contrast and gray appearance of Kelso's pictures seem to diminish rather than enhance the vast Montana skyscape.

Dead Tech: A Guide to the Archaeology of Tomorrow, by Manfred Hamm and Benzedrin (Wiley, $39.95). This thought-provoking volume reminds us that while time waits for no man, it is even less patient with his creations. As technology advances ever more rapidly, the march of outdated hardware to the scrapheap becomes ever faster. The ruins of the 20th century industrial state—from the Maginot Line to abandoned nuclear power facilities—lie in silent, crumbling eloquence before Hamm's camera.

El Salvador, with text by Carolyn Forche ( Writers and Readers Co-op, $29.95). Another kind of death is depicted in often grisly black-and-white pictures by 30 photographers who have covered the civil strife there for various news organizations. Whatever its causes or ultimate outcome, the conflict has spread fear, confusion, and death among a people already beset with crippling economic and social problems. In the tradition of eyes-open photojournalism, this troubling book is not for the faint of heart.

The World's Family, by Ken Heyman (Putnam's, $19.95). For all its problems, there is joy, beauty, and dignity in the world. Heyman's 192-page album rings with affirmation. It is a one-man homing to Edward Steichen, whose landmark The Family of Man inspired Heyman to take up photography.

The Joy of Photographic People, by the editors of Eastman Kodak (Addison-Wesley, $14.95). This practical and colorful 240-page paperback combines a mixed bag of people pictures with technical tips for the photojournalist.

Knopf also offers four new titles in its Guides to American Antiques series. New titles, each $13.95, are Jane Shadel Spillman's Glass 2, Wendy Lavitt's Dolls, William Ketchum Jr.'s Pottery & Porcelain, and Robert Bishop and Judith Reiter Weissman's Folk Art. As do the earlier in the series—Quilts, Pottery, Furniture, Glass 1—these new volumes offer visual keys, current prices, and collecting tips.

A sure winner is Judith Martin's funny but thoroughly useful Miss Manners' Guide to Excruciatingly Correct Behavior (Warner, $16.95). For the film buff, The Movie Quote Book, by Harry Hahn (Harper & Row, $9.95), puts down in ink all those famous lines you've always wanted to quote.

Thurman's Isak Dinesen (St. Martin's, $9.95), and Stephen B. Oates' Let the Trumpet Sound: The Life of Martin Luther King Jr. (NAL/Plume, $8.95). For short-story lovers, there are Collected Stories, by V. S. Pritchett (Vintage, $8.95); Great Exquisite Fiction, edited by L. Rust Hills (Farrar, $19.95), and Mystery & Suspense Stories: The Year's Best, edited by E. D. Hoch (Walker, $8.95). New from Bantam ($2.95) is Short Stories, edited by Irving Howe and Ilana Wiener Hove, a collection of 35 tales from Tolstoy to Garcia Marquez.

Then There's the T. L. C. Life, by Mike Rooney (Bantam, $2.95). Finally, Who? Scz Mr? (Warner, $3.95), a collection of wis and wits.
WE SHIP HOLIDAY GIFT BOXES
DELICIOUS ... NORTHWEST ...

SMOKED SALMON
IMPRESSIVE BUSINESS GIFTS
PERFECT FOR FAMILY AND FRIENDS GREAT FOR HOLIDAY PARTIES

TOTEM SMOKEHOUSE
PIKE PLACE MARKET, 1900 PIKE PLACE, SEATTLE 98101
PHONE ORDERS WELCOME.
223-1710

WE'VE GOT
THE RIGHT STUFF
AT ENOTECA
- Wine gift sets
- Wine books & accessories
- Wine & food baskets
- Antique crystal decanters
- Gift Certificates

1522 Fifth Ave - 624-9108

Announcing the 1984 edition of
The Best Places

The Northwest's most popular guide to the best in restaurants and lodging. New 1984 edition contains hundreds of listings, each rated in The Best Places' famous "four star" system. The indispensable guide to the Northwest traveler; great for close-to-home traveling or as well.
Available in bookstores and select specialty shops throughout Washington, Oregon, and British Columbia.

The Wedge
- for "self-indulgent" gifts and simply elegant catering.

NEW
Special Northwest Section
Quality & Economical
Frozen Food Line

The Wedge
University Village
523-2560
Open 7 days

THE ULTIMATE STEAK!
Filet Mignon

Carved from the very heart of our most prized tenderloin, a filet mignon is indisputably the juiciest, leanest, tenderest, tastiest cut of all. Little wonder it is the most widely purchased of our steaks.
Average weight, fourpound/box ............... $5.98/lb.

An outstanding selection of gourmet meats, poultry, seafood, condiments, hors d'oeuvres.

18411 Alderwood Mall Blvd.
Lynnwood, WA 98036
(206) 771-6145

1443 N.W. Richmond Beach Road
Seattle, WA 98177
(206) 542-6818

GOURMET GIFT

THE BEST CHEESES
AT
THE BEST PRICES
French Double Creme
only
BRIE $2.49
Creamy
And HAVARTI $2.49
Excellent Quality

Watch for the Beaujails Nouveau
4217 University Way NE
634-6340
VALIDATED PARKING IN BACK INTERNATIONAL BOOKS
Call us and ask, we may have what you need in Albanian or in Zuni.
Tuesday-Saturday 10am–6pm
1506 East Denny on Capitol Hill
323-5667

PS... Your Personal Shopper
An all occasion Shopping Service for those with discriminating taste and little time.
Linda Lawson • 783-6619

BOOKS ARE A THOUGHTFUL GIFT!
OUR 66-PAGE COLOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOG MAKES SHOPPING EASY
OUR DISCOUNT PRICES AND LOW-COST MAIL SERVICE
MAKE BOOKS THE ECONOMICAL CHOICE
All Books Are New in Regular Publisher's Editions
Not Rejects or Seconds
Call 624-8086 or Write For Your Free Catalog
FIFTH AVENUE BOOKS
1410 Fifth Avenue (lower level — Logan Bldg.) Seattle, WA 98101

SEASON'S READINGS
The Pick of Christmas Gift Books
Edited by Tim Appelo

THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS, AND WHAT ALICE FOUND THERE
by Lewis Carroll, illustrated by Barry Moser
University of California Press, $19.95 until 12/31/83, $24.50 thereafter.

Last year, Moser and the University of California Press won the American Book Award for the design of Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, and the hearts of thousands of readers. Newsweek called Moser's illustrations "as violent an antidote to Tenniel's quaint realism as anything that Alice imbued from a medicine bottle." I happen to find Tenniel's illustrations disturbing and excellant, and I like Moser's very different, dazzlingly clear-eyed wood engravings as well. So no matter how you feel about the ancestral Alice, you're likely to enjoy this one. The helpful, hip-to-Freud but not overbearing preface and footnotes are by James Kincaid. You can get last year's, Alice's Adventures in Wonderland and the current Through the Looking Glass in a boxed set for $38.50.

As for the difference between the two Alice's, listen to Kincaid: "Alice flings herself down the rabbit hole and into Wonderland in May; in November of that same year she glides into the Looking Glass... Through the Looking Glass seems an immeasurably older book than Alice's Adventures in Wonderland. For Alice, the story is a magic potion to ward off the stormwind of adulthood and death." For Carroll, it is an attempt to ward off time, which steals his beloved young friends from him and makes them alien, adolescent, and remote: "there are few things in the world as evanescent as a child's love." According to Kincaid, for Carroll "words are a cabalistic stay against loss, growth, forgetting and betraying."

Keep this in mind as you read: and as you regard Moser's 92 illustrations, remember that he has used Richard Nixon as the model for Humpty Dumpty, and for the White Knight, one Lewis Carroll.
—Tim Appelo

THE HERITAGE OF BRITISH LITERATURE
by Graham Greene, Anthony Burgess, Elizabeth Bowen, Lord David Cecil, and Kate O'Brien
Thames and Hudson Inc., $24.95

"Let me begin," writes Kate O'Brien, "with the hard saying that the best English diaries have been written by bores." This provocative opening to the fourth of five essays in The Heritage of British Literature pretty much reflects the first-rate writing, the energetic and in some cases heretical thinking of its contributors. Besides O'Brien on diarists, we get Elizabeth Bowen on novelists, Lord David Cecil on poets, and Graham Greene on dramatists: the essays were first published during World War II. For this collection, a generous array of illustrations, engravings, photographs, and bookplates have been reproduced, and Anthony Burgess has been assigned the thankless task of summing up postwar English literature in the Afterword. The result is remarkably entertaining and educational—a kind of Norton Anthology without the literature, a truly satisfying fix for the insatiable Anglo-literary addict.
—Ann Senechal

Moser's Humpty Dumpty: new design for Through the Looking Glass.

INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY
Photographs by Duncan Kelso, text by Ivan Doig
Athenaeum, $27.50

This is not a reissue of Doig's remarkable memoir of Montana, but a tribute to it in 65 duotone photographs. It is not every book that could sustain such a tribute; This House of Sky practically demands it. The landscape is full to bursting with the emptiness that stretches from the Cascades to the Plains, a terrain as alien to Seattleites as Mars. Kelso's effort (with swatches of matching passages from This House of Sky) shows that in describing Montana, Doig wasn't just spinning pretty metaphors.
—Tim Appelo

LOUIS WAIN'S EDWARDIAN CATS
Edited by Michael Parkinson
Thames and Hudson, $12.95

Louis Wain was renowned throughout Edwardian England for his anthropomorphic portraits of cats. Said H.G. Wells, "Wain invented a cat style, a cat society, a whole cat world." That world was the Edwardian one, tellingly depicted in this little collection. Parkinson's brief essay accompanying the 62 color and black-and-white illustrations is intriguing, informing us that, among other distinctions, Wain created the much of an adventure; they traveled by commercial plane and ship and nothing truly extraordinary ever seemed to happen. The marriage is Temple and Nancy Fielding on their worst day. But nothing is left out, not the price of a hotel room nor the observation that a flight attendant served coffee.

Inside This House of Sky, photographs by Duncan Kelso and text by Ivan Doig (Atheneum: $27.50) is a picture album, really, a collaboration resulting from Kelso's enthusiasm for Doig's earlier prose portrait of his Montana boyhood. "This House of Sky." Kelso photographed the places about which Doig had written, the plains where "the wind tries barbed wire for a harp." Doig's Montana comes to life in 65 black-and-white landscapes and skyscapes.

Look Back on England by John Burke (Salem House: $16.95, illustrated) is for the dedicated Anglophile. The premise: that if it's London, this must be Westminster Abbey, but no one ever tells you anything about the non-monuments, the pubs with eccentric names, the paths that no longer lead anywhere, that the toolshed in an ancient cemetery once was a watchers' hut where families of the deceased kept a vigil against body snatchers who would sell to medical researchers. "England is one vast open-air museum," says Burke, who is a novelist and historian. An intriguing concept. The going's a bit heavy here, but there's an occasional gem.

Cradle of Mankind by Mohamed Amin (Overlook: $50) is the Nairobi photographer's record of life in Africa's Great Rift Valley, far North of Kenya. Here, on the shores of Lake Turkana, man may have taken his first heavy step. The foreword is by Richard Leakey, one of those attracted to the scientific community that formed there after multiple findings of prehistoric fossils. In the early '60s, Drs. Louis and Mary Leakey's finds included remains identified as the 1.8-million-year-old hominid, a remote ancestor of the human race. An interesting volume, with some good photos, including a study of a flight of great white pelicans passing above a crocodile slumbering on a sand spit. The author fears for the future of the warring, nomadic desert tribes who inhabit the area; at last, he says, "time has caught up with the people it forgot."

Beyette is a Times staff writer.
Britannia rules again
British music jams U.S. charts as teens return to rock’s fold

By Kurt Loder, Peter York and Parke Puterbaugh
Rolling Stone

We are in the midst of a new British invasion. The American charts now list more records by United Kingdom acts than at the height of Beatlemania, nearly 20 years ago.

— who dressed like some incongruous cross between Joan Crawford and Grace Metalious and who wore more makeup than most women — could capture the hearts and wallets of straight, young (not to mention old) pop fans around the world would have seemed remote.

But George and his band, Culture Club (rounded out by guitarist Roy Hay, bassist Mike Craig and Every Nov. 16, truck drivers in Beaulieu, France, gather at wineries for a traditional meal of sausages, cheeses and fresh breads accompanied by the first bottles of Beaulieu Nouveau. That evening a gun is firing, signaling that it is time for the drivers to load up their trucks with the season's new wine and cart it to Paris.

The first trucks to reach Paris are greeted by revelers waiting at their favorite bistro. Similar scenes are enacted at the arrival of the wine in London and New York.

So on Wednesday, Nov. 16, The Seattle Art Museum is staging its own French madness. It's a $125, black-tie, five-course dinner party at the museum to taste five new wines (Beaulieu-Villages Nouveau, Georges DuBoef; Beaulieu Nouveau, Mommessin; Amity Nouveau, Amity; Beaulieu Nouveau, Nicolas, and Nouveau Grenache, Ste. Michelle. Reservations: 447-4677.

CLOUDY DAY — Today's shaggy dog story, friends, deals with the drenching rain that pelted the Puget Sound area last Thursday, tying up traffic for miles and flooding storm drains. All names have been changed, but the incident set down is true.

Two friends were lunching in a downtown Seattle bistro. At 1 p.m., Man 1 returned to work, but Man 2 stayed on to have another drink. One drink became two, then three, etc. and at 4:45 Man 2 called Man 1. Come join me, he said.

In the heavy rain, Man 1 walked from his office, more than a block away, to the bar where he found Man 2 with glassy eyes. You can't drive, Man 1 said. You are sloshed. Wait here. Whereupon Man 1 returned to his office in the rain, gave his wife the keys to his car and said he would drive Man 2 home.

Back to the bar in the rain he went — to discover that Man 2 had taken off. So Man 1 returned to his office in the rain, only to learn his wife also had left for their home in the Newport Hills area.

An inspiration! Man 1 remembered a friend, Man 3, who also had been drinking most of the afternoon in the bistro. He called up the bar. Wait there, he said. I need a ride home. Through the rain again Man 1 hurried to the bar, only to see Man 3's car pulling away.

But Man 1 was undaunted. Quick- ly he hooched it to another bar where some of his co-workers met at day's end. Sure, they said, we'll give you a ride home. But first, have a drink!

Is that a sopping-wet Man 1 didn't get home until nearly 11 p.m., where he received a chilly reception from his spouse, who expressed some doubt about the authenticity of his alibi. "I took all of this (expletive deleted) just for trying to be a good guy," says Man 1. Moral: Most people know when to come in out of the rain; they just can't find a way to do it.

DOIG'S COUNTRY — In 1978, Seattle writer Ivan Doig wrote a sensitive, searching memoir titled "This House of Sky," a story about growing up in Montana that was nominated for the distinguished National Book Award in contemporary thought. Now he and Seattle photographer Duncan Kelso, who grew up in Montana, have brought together "Inside This House of Sky" (Atheneum, $27.50), a photographic tribute to the Big Sky country inspired by Doig's memoir. It contains some fantastic landscapes of the mind for replanted Montanans.

OPEN WIDE — Dentists aren't widely known for handing out a lot of laughs while they're messing with our molars, but Dr. William C. Colwell, a North End oral surgeon, is an easygoing guy who seems to have a quip a moment. Colwell is one of five selected by the special commit- tee of Washington State University alumni as a Dad of the Year, an award given to WSU grads-or-the fathers of WSU students.

In Colwell's case it's both. He and his wife were graduated from Wazzu in the '60s before he went on to further education and training at such prestigious institutions as the U. of Maryland, Johns Hopkins U. and Boston U.

Now their daughter Kristy is a senior psych major at WSU. Colwell, incidentally, specializes in oral/maxillofacial surgery, and he says, "It's only fitting that we give you a mouthful."

TUBE SHOOTERS — An added attraction to Tuesday night's Seattle Supersonics-Phoenix Suns basketball game in the Kingdome is a halftime square-off between KING-TV personalities: sports reporter Carol DeValle and Christine Curren, a reporter for the station's Saturday a.m. kids show, "Flash."

They'll participate in Celebrity Hotshot, a program designed to give exposure to Safeway/Pepper's Challenge Hotshot, a national basketball program for 2½ million kids between 9 and 18. There may be no such thing as an underdog in the halftime tilt, but it's a chance to root for your favorite undercelebrity.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>BIN LOCATION</th>
<th>ISBN IDENTIFICATION</th>
<th>QUANTITY</th>
<th>TITLE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>861200</td>
<td>689114052</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY CL</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>3 ITEMS</td>
<td>7.00 TOTAL WGT</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>MERCHANDISE</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

NLA - NO LONGER AVAILABLE
NYP - NOT YET PUBLISHED - TITLE BACK ORDERED
NYP - NOT YET PUBLISHED - ORDER CANCELLED
OS - OUT OF STOCK - TITLE BACK ORDERED
OSOC - OUT OF STOCK - ORDER CANCELLED
OP - OUT OF PRINT
* - BOOKS SHIPPED FROM BINDERY
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>REQUESTED CANCEL DATES</th>
<th>CUSTOMER IDENTIFICATION</th>
<th>TYPE BILLING</th>
<th>TERMS</th>
<th>CUSTOMER ORDER NUMBER</th>
<th>INVOICE DATE</th>
<th>INVOICE NUMBER</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>BACK ORDER</td>
<td>105770-1552/15</td>
<td>NET/30</td>
<td>32939</td>
<td>11/01/83</td>
<td>10664</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PRE PUB</td>
<td>71552</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>ISBN IDENTIFICATION</th>
<th>QUANTITY</th>
<th>TITLE</th>
<th>LIST PRICE</th>
<th>% DISC.</th>
<th>AMOUNT</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>689114052</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY</td>
<td>27.50</td>
<td>N/C</td>
<td>.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>GL</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>MERCHANDISE TOTAL</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>3 ITEMS 7.00 TOTAL WGT</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

SHIP VIA

- UPS

ADDRESS

IVAN DOIG
17021 TENTH AVE NW
SEATTLE WA 98171

EDITORIAL

BILL TO

EDITN

REMIT PAYMENT TO

P. O. BOX 10235
NEWARK, NJ 07195

FOR PROMPT SERVICE

PLEASE INCLUDE OUR INVOICE NO. ON ALL CORRESPONDENCE.
SEND ALL ORDERS AND CORRESPONDENCE TO OUR SERVICE CENTER
201 WILLOWBROOK BLVD • WAYNE, N.J. 07470
TEL 201-256-0700 • TELEX 130403

FOR PROMPT RETURNS CREDIT
PLEASE INCLUDE OUR INVOICE NUMBER ON ALL RETURNS.
SEND TO OUR SHIPPING CENTER AT
SCRIBNER BOOK COMPANIES, INC.
G/O KINGSPORT PRESS
HAWKINS COUNTY DISTRIBUTION CENTER
KINGSPORT, TN 37660

DUPLICATE INVOICE

SAN IDENTIFICATION PAGE

200-2191 1
REMIT PAYMENT TO

P.O. BOX 10235
NEWARK, NJ 07105

FOR PROMPT SERVICE
PLEASE INCLUDE OUR INVOICE NO. ON ALL CORRESPONDENCE
SEND ALL ORDERS AND CORRESPONDENCE TO OUR SERVICE CENTER
201 WILLOWBROOK BLVD • WAYNE, N.J 07470
TEL 201-256-0700 • TELEX 130404

FOR PROMPT RETURNS CREDIT
PLEASE INCLUDE OUR INVOICE NUMBER ON ALL RETURNS
SEND TO OUR SHIPPING CENTER AT
SCRIBNER BOOK COMPANIES, INC.
C/O KINGSPORT PRESS
HAWKINS COUNTY DISTRIBUTION CENTER
KINGSPORT, TN 37660

SAN IDENTIFICATION

PAGE

200-2191

1

REQUESTED CANCEL DATES

CUSTOMER IDENTIFICATION

TYPE BILLING

NET/30

32939

11/01/83

10644

EDITORIAL

BILL TO

SHIP TO

EDITN

SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS

ISBN IDENTIFICATION

QUANTITY

3

TITLES

INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY CL

3 ITEMS

7.00 TOTAL WGT

LIST PRICE

27.90

N/C

MERCHANDISE TOTAL

% DISC.

AMOUNT

.00

.00

TOTAL AMOUNT

.00

NLA - NO LONGER AVAILABLE

NYP - NOT YET PUBLISHED - TITLE BACK ORDERED

OS - OUT OF STOCK - TITLE BACK ORDERED

OP - OUT OF PRINT

NOP - NOT OUR PUBLICATION

NYPOC - NOT YET PUBLISHED - ORDER CANCELLED

OSOC - OUT OF STOCK - ORDER CANCELLED

* - BOOKS SHIPPED FROM BINDERY
Kelso illustrates Doig book - in new one

By TERRY DWYER
Tribune Managing Editor

"Inside This House of Sky," scheduled for release Nov. 9, was inspired by Ivan Doig's award-winning book "This House of Sky" about growing up in Montana but the new hard-cover photographic volume by Duncan Kelso with text by Doig probably would not be considered a sequel in the normal conception of the word.

Of the original book, Robert Kirsch of the Los Angeles Times wrote, "The language begins in Western territory and experience but in the hands of an artist it touches all landscapes and all life. Doig is such an artist."

"INSIDE This House of Sky" captures the landscape from foothills of the Belt Mountains in the White Sulphur Springs area where Doig spent much of his early childhood to the small community of Dupuyer and the rugged mountains of the Rocky Mountain front.

Kelso's camera lens captures a feeling of loneliness in the abandoned depot at White Sulphur Springs, crumbling homestead cabins on grassland which never should have been plowed as well as a deserted old church at Ringling. The landscapes are as varied as the total Montana scene and, to a Montanan who has visited many of the areas or a reader who enjoyed "This House of Sky," the new book brings many memories.

KELSO, a freelance photographer and environmental-planning consultant in Seattle, says the original book "affected me like no other book I'd ever read." It prompted him to attempt to capture on film the landscapes described in the book. He has done a creditable job.

Born in Indiana, Kelso grew up in Montana, northern California and eastern Washington. A former teaching assistant at the University of Washington, he worked five years as a photographer for Boeing Co. His works have appeared in magazines and been displayed in Seattle galleries.

IN AN OPENING section of the new book entitled "The Eye of Time," Doig recalls his early enchantment with the family albums, snapshots kept by his grandmother. Of the book he writes, "now arrives the latest lineage of albums, "Duncan Kelso's picturing of the country of my book."

Those who read "This House of Sky" know Doig also grew up in Valier and spent considerable time on the rangeland east of Glacier National Park.

"This House of Sky" was chosen by Pacific Northwest Magazine as one of 25 best books about the Northwest and by a poll of readers of Montana: The Magazine of Western History as one of five best books ever written about Montana.
A flower bed, bursting with brilliant color, later attested to her green thumb and provided motorists with a pleasing sight as they passed her home on the north edge of Denton.

And next year she plans to do more.

“T just like things that grow,” she explained. “Where I grew up, out at Bear Springs, there was no water. It was something to have even a dandelion bloom. We hauled water when I was first married too. This is the first time that I have ever had water.”

When she and her husband Virgil moved to Denton would be able to irrigate her yard, the first thing she did was plan a greenhouse. It was built last spring, adjoining the barn. But before that, in February, she planted seeds in flats in the house.

“I really went wild,” she said. “I had so many I ended up selling flowers (plants) to get rid of them.”

By the time the walls of the greenhouse were up, Gluth’s plants were almost taking over her home. “We just had little trails to walk through the house,” she said. “Wade (her son) came home from school one day and found a wheelbarrow of soil in the kitchen. I fed the plants fish oil and nobody could eat in the house.”

Gluth put out 500 tulip bulbs last fall, along with 57 varieties of iris. They made a splash of early spring color before the annuals were planted.

Weeding isn’t as big a problem as people might imagine, Gluth said. “I plant the flowers so close together there is no room for weeds,” she explained.

Water restrictions were imposed by the town of Denton during the month of August, but Gluth coped with that problem. “The flowers sort of shade themselves,” she said, “and I put about eight inches of grass clippings on my vegetable garden to hold the moisture.”

The vegetable garden, incidentally, covers 60,000 square feet. The sod was broken for it just last year. “We had quack grass and dandelion and beans all growing together,” Gluth laughed. “I said we had the best weeds in town.”

---

Calendar rules

To be listed in Calendar, events must be open to the public and of general interest. Items for Calendar must be submitted in writing by Tuesday noon before publication. Announcements should be addressed to Calendar and delivered to the Tribune, 205 River Drive S., or mailed to Tribune, P.O. Box 5468.
Kelso illustrates Doig book - in new one

By TERRY DWYER

"Inside This House of Sky," scheduled for release Nov. 9, was inspired by Ivan Doig's award-winning book "This House of Sky" about growing up in Montana but the new hard-cover photographic volume by Duncan Kelso with text by Doig probably would not be considered a sequel in the normal conception of the word.

Of the original book, Robert Kirsch of the Los Angeles Times wrote, "The language begins in western territory and experience but in the hands of an artist it touches all landscapes and all life. Doig is such an artist."

"INSIDE This House of Sky" captures the landscape from foothills of the Belt Mountains in the White Sulphur Springs area where Doig spent much of his early childhood to the small community of Dupuyer and the rugged mountains of the Rocky Mountain front.

Kelso's camera lens captures a feeling of loneliness in the abandoned depot at White Sulphur Springs, crumbling homestead cabins on grassland which never should have been plowed as well as a deserted old church at Ringling. The landscapes are as varied as the total Montana scene and, to a Montanan who has visited many of the areas or a reader who enjoyed "This House of Sky," the new book brings many memories.

KELO, a freelance photographer and environmental-planning consultant in Seattle, says the original book "affected me like no other book I'd ever read." It prompted him to attempt to capture on film the landscapes described in the book. He has done a creditable job.

Born in Indiana, Kelso grew up in Montana, northern California and eastern Washington. A former teaching assistant at the University of Washington, he worked five years as a photographer for Boeing Co. His works have appeared in magazines and been displayed in Seattle galleries.

IN AN OPENING section of the new book entitled "The Eye of Time," Doig recalls his early enchantment with the family albums, snapshots kept by his grandmother. Of the book he writes, "now arrives the latest lineage of albums, "Duncan Kelso's picturing of the country of my book."

Those who read "This House of Sky" know Doig also grew up in Valier and spent considerable time on the rangeland east of Glacier National Park.

"This House of Sky" was chosen by Pacific Northwest Magazine as one of 25 best books about the Northwest and by polj of readers of Montana: The Magazine of Western History as one of five best books ever written about Montana.
Dear Duncan—

Some miscellaneous INSIDE THOS stuff since I saw you a week ago:

—Liz called this morn, said the article fee is mine and the pic fee is yours, in the Montana Magazine deal.

—A note from Tom which I assume you also got, but in case you didn't: they'll run ads in the P-I on Nov. 27 and in NY Times Book Review Dec. 4.

—After lunch with you I dropped by both the Bix-Nadore and DeGraff bookstores. Good news is they both had copies of INSIDE, bad news is the covers were messed up. I wrote an immediate note to Tom, and suggested that if the cover problem is epidemic, they send a supply to the regional distributor, Pacific Pipeline, so booksellers can get replacements. Today I was in the U Book Store; they didn't have their copies yet, but I asked them to let us know if there are cover problems.

—While in the U Book Store I came across Ann Combs, the P-I humor columnist and also an Athenaeum author, putting her name in the U's copies of her book. Which reminded me, in case I or anybody else has never mentioned this: booksellers generally are happy to have authors drop by and sign whatever copies they have on hand. If you'd like to do so, don't hesitate to ask them if they'd like your John Hancock done. I'll likely put mine in, for the U District and Edmonds stores I frequent.

—And a review from the Great Falls Tribune, sent by a Montana friend. I'll pass a copy to Tom.

best,
October 27, 1983

Mr. Ivan Doig
17021 Tenth Avenue N.W.
Seattle, Washington  98177

Dear Ivan,

There will be an ad for INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer on November 27, and the book will be one of six in a full-page Christmas ad in the New York Times Book Review on December 4.

Best,

Thomas A. Stewart
Editor in Chief
Dear Tom—

Just a quick Halloween bulletin to you: some evil is haunting the dust jackets of INSIDE THOS, at least those that are getting to Seattle. Ann may have apprised you of the ruined jackets on the comp copies to Duncan and me; I suppose we can write that off to somebody having hired gorillas in the mail room. But yesterday I was in a couple of bookstores, and they too had jacket woes—all of the books at DeGraff Books came with torn or marred covers, and all but one at Fix-Madore Bookstore. I couldn’t reach Rantala to see if he’s been hearing this generally. But the woman in DeGraff’s made what seemed to me a sane proposal, that if the INSIDE THOS jacket problem is an epidemic out here, maybe replacement covers could be sent to the regional distributor, Pacific Pipeline, and the store owners could thus salvage the situation. If this 2-disasters-out-of-2-chances is a statistical aberration, okay; but if it ain’t, I thought you ought to be aware of it.

The occasion of my being away from the typewriter and in bookstores was lunch with Duncan Kelso, to mark INSIDE THOS publication. He seems in decent fettle, new job, etc. And things are hunky-dory here with me; if I don’t break a finger I should have the final third of ENGLISH CREEK done by Thanksgiving, and then will spend a few weeks fine-tuning.

all best

[Signature]
Mountaineer Duncan Kelso has produced for us a rewarding book, Inside This House of Sky. Published by Atheneum Press of New York, the book has excellent duotone reproductions of 65 of Duncan's sweeping black and white photographs of Montana along with excerpts from Ivan Doig's famous Montana book, This House of Sky.

Although not a mountain or wilderness book in the traditional sense, Inside This House of Sky is a stunning exposition of huge skies and vast open places which are surely wild and seemingly boundless if not wilderness per se.

The book will appeal to all lovers of open places as well as Montana buffs, Ivan Doig fans and all those interested in serious pictorial photography.

The book has a horizontal format, pages 6 inches high and 12 inches wide, which suits the flat and broad subject perfectly. As you would expect from the title the sky is an important element and a large majority of the pictures are skyscapes as well as landscapes. In some cases the sky is blank. Just right. That's the way the sky often really is; huge, wide and blank but it takes a photographer of some courage to print it that way. Especially strong is one of the pictures in the "Basin" section of the book where an old homestead site crouches under a blank staring sky. Good stuff. After you've been through the book, the landscapes, the little towns, the lonely cabins and roads stretching off to infinity you come away with the feeling that you really know Meagher County, Montana.
Dear Liz and Nancy—

Montana Magazine sent me the money for the INSIDE THOS piece they ran. So here’s a photocopy, and my check for your fee. I’ve lost track of what the arrangement was on that piece. Was Duncan to be paid separately by Montana Mag for his 2 pics they used, or do I split the $180 remainder with him?

I did manage to make a Guggenheim application again this year, and the enclosed is the description of the project. Unless I get so sick of McCaskills by the end of this ms that I can’t face any more, it’s the novel I’d like to do next. More on that later, when I get this one done.

English Creek is going okay. I have about another month of shaping the final chapter, then will have to tinker for 3 weeks or a month with the entire ms—so I think the target is just before Xmas.

More later, or at least eventually. best,
MONTANA MAGAZINE, INC.
EDITORIAL ACCOUNT
P. O. BOX 5630  443-2842
HELENA, MT  59601

DAY TO THE ORDER OF $200.00
TWO HUNDRED DOLLARS

Norwest Bank Helena
P.O. Box 597
Helena, MT 59624

For

Mark O. Thompson

10/17  1983
Dear Mary---

The first copy of INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY has come, and it is a very handsome job of design. As SEA RUNNERS was. It's a real bonus to a writer, to have his books come out looking so splendid.

best,
September 22, 1983

Dear Swan,

Hot off the press!

Best,

[Signature]
July 12, 1983

Mr. Ivan Doig
17021 Tenth Avenue N.W.
Seattle, Washington 98177

Dear Ivan,

Just to double-check so that, when the time comes, we won't be in the position of asking these questions after we've agreed to a deal: Are the rights for the portion of text we're using in INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY free and clear from HBJ for paperback and book club editions?

I know you're away, but there's no hurry for an answer. I hope your Montana trip was good!

Best wishes,

Ann Rittenberg
Assistant to Tom Stewart
21 July '83

Dear Ann—

Hiya! I'm back from Montana, but still car-groggery. I don't actually know where the sub rights of INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY stand—I have found this business of securing permission for my own words very arcane. Would you check with Liz Darhansoff on the matter? Or better yet, write and keep each possible yes? In writing YES TO ROUTE THIS EMBELLISHMENT OF TALE yes yes yes yes, etc. etc. etc. etc. etc. etc. etc.

The Montana trip went well. I managed to write in a motel, in a borrowed bedroom, in a house up a gulch south of Helena—and collected some good scenery and scenes for ENGLISH CREEK. I'll pretty much be home the rest of the summer—back on a regular writing schedule next week. Best to Tom, wherever he be.

Sincerely,

[Signature]
Dear Mark--

Carol and I got back to Seattle earlier than foreseen, so herewith are the pics and captions to go with the EYE OF TIME piece. I hope they reach in time for doing layout.

I've had to substitute for one pic--of my on a trike and my grandmother beside me--because I can't come up with it; it must be floating somewhere in the other 4,99 family pics. To compensate, I've put in three other pics--total of 13--and also an including the negative of my dad and his brother in their 4th of July rodeo duds; the negative (unlike the print) has my mother's handwriting across the top, "Ready for the Big Day. July 4, 1928"

Two of the pics--#1, my grandmother beside the jeep, and #5, me peering at sheep--are originals; guard them with your life, will you?

As to the author's note you intend to run with the piece, it's dawned on me that the title of my '84 novel, ENGLISH CREEK, probably shouldn't be mentioned until it's actually on the book jacket; you know the vagaries of editors. So how about just saying it'll be a novel, set in the country between Sun Rivers and the Two Medicine River during the Depression, planned for publication in fall of '84. Or however much of that you're comfortable with using.

Looking forward to seeing the piece in print.

best

cc: Nancy Meiselas

enc: 13 photos; 1 neg; 1 caption sheet.
captions for Ivan Doig EYE OF TIME pics:

#1--Bessie Ringer with sheepdogs Spot and Tip and the family Jeep, during a herding summer on the Blackfeet Reservation.

#2--A horse race by various Doigs and others, likely through the village of Sixteen.

#3--Author Ivan Doig’s parents, Berneta and Charles Doig, at their sheep camp on Grass Mountain in 1934.

#4--Ivan Doig, age three, at the Jim Stewart ranch near Sixteen.

#5--Ivan Doig watches his father, Charles Doig, work sheep.

#6--"Ready for the Big Day" of the White Sulphur Springs rodeo, July 4, 1928, were brothers Charles (left) and Angus Doig.

#7--Charlie and Angus Doig on Angus’s roping horse at the 4th of July rodeo in White Sulphur Springs, 1928.

#8--Charlie Doig (in striped shirt and bowtie) poses with three of his brothers (left to right: Claude, Angus, Charlie, Jim) and a neighbor at the Doig homestead near Sixteen in the early 1920’s.

#9--Charlie Doig, (far left) with a ranch crew of the 1930’s.

#10--Charlie Doig range-branding a calf near Ringling in the 1920’s.

#11--At the Doig homestead near Sixteen (Wall Mountain in the background) author Ivan Doig’s mother, Berneta (left) and his aunt, Anna Doig, pose in their go-to-town best.

#12--Author Ivan Doig poses with his uncle, William Ringer (left) and his father, Charlie Doig, and their winter’s bounty of coyotes at the Stewart ranch near Sixteen in the early 1940’s.

#13--Charlie Doig with the winter’s bounty of coyotes at the Stewart ranch near Sixteen in the early 1940’s.
Contents

THE EYE OF TIME
INTRODUCTION
SKY
VALLEY
MOUNTAIN
BASIN
TOWN
NEIGHBORS
NORTH
WINTER

Sky
Valley
Mountain
Basin
Town Neighbors
North
Winter
Inside This House of Sky

Photographs by Duncan Kelso / Text by Ivan Doig

To Gerry and Charlie, who brought me to Montana,
To Gerry and Charlie, who brought me to Montana, and Katy, who brought me Ivan

-D.K.

And to three skilled builders of This House of Sky:
Carol Hill, Ann Nelson, Marshall Nelson

—I.D.
The Eye of Time

The Eye of Time

Of the three of us, it was my grandmother who preserved the photographs, as automatically diligent as if she were canning garden vegetables to carry us through the white worst months of winter. The albums even had their own sort of cellar: the dark and dust beneath the bed my father and I shared. Gee gosh, someday—the announcement always meant under-the-bed diving was being done, she was retrieving one or another album in which to put this year's school picture of me as a startlingly pompadoured sixth-grader or one of my father in unbuckled overshoes beside his latest obstetrical miracle, triplet purebred Hereford calves, or of Grandma herself posed beside the Jeep with her beloved but fidgety sheepdogs, Spot and Tip, ambivalently atop the hood. A photo is its own moment, blind to the future. In those Montana years none of us had so much as a hint that the albums would be the main witnesses to Bessie Ringer and Charlie Doig and myself as I worked at the writing of This House of Sky, and that the someday when the four black-paged collections would have a handier existence on an actual reachable shelf is only now, in my house in a Seattle suburban valley.

What durnfounds me whenever I bring out this photographic pouncage is that during the fifteen years my father and my mother's mother and I were a family, we didn't own a camera. The evidence of our existence does thin out dangerously during the middle of that period—not a single photo dating from the three years we spent on a bleak leased ranch south of Dupuyer; testimony unto itself, perhaps, about that woebegone damn place—but just often enough, somebody snapped a shot and thought to provide us a print.

It is the time before, the black-and-white era when my mother was alive, that the camera eye steadily took in Doig and Ringer family life. Two of the four albums were my mother's, her handwriting across the top of many of the photos. Blessed I am that she shared my habit of scribbling annotation. To me, the effective writing in this 1928 scene from This House of Sky is not mine but hers:

"It was the Fourth of July celebration in White Sulphur Springs, and they took the town. . . . That holiday's snapshots show up in a happy flurry; every scene has been braided to its moment by her looping writing. Ready for the Big Day: Dad and his brother Angus have doffed their black ten-gallon hats for the camera, grins in place under their slicked hair, and bandannas fluttering at their necks like flags of a new as I worked at the writing of This House of Sky, and that the someday when the four black-paged collections would have a handier existence on an actual reachable shelf is only now, in my house in a Seattle suburban valley.

What dumbfounds me whenever I bring out this photographic poundage is that during the fifteen years my father and my mother's mother and I were a family, we didn't own a camera. The evidence of our existence does thin out dangerously during the middle of that period—not a single photo dating from the three years we spent on a bleak leased ranch south of Dupuyer;
testimony unto itself, perhaps, about that woebegone damn place—but just often enough, somebody snapped a shot and thought to provide us a print.

It is the time before, the black-and-white era when my mother was alive, that the camera eye steadily took in Doig and Ringer family life. Two of the four albums were my mother's, her handwriting across the top of many of the photos. Blessed I am that she shared my habit of scribbling annotation. To me, the effective writing in this 1928 scene from This House of Sky is not mine but hers:

"It was the Fourth of July celebration in White Sulphur Springs, and they took the town... That holiday's snapshots show up in a happy flurry; every scene has been braided to its moment by her looping writing. Ready for the Big Day: Dad and his brother Angus have doffed their black ten-gallon hats for the camera, grins in place under their slicked hair, and bandannas fluttering at their necks like flags of a new country. The Wildest Bunch in W.S.S.— seven of them from Ringling and the Basin are ganged along the side of a car, handrolled cigarettes angling out of the men's mouths, my mother and her cousin small prim fluffs in the dark cloudbank of cowboy hats....
There is another photo taken soon afterward, in which my father grins cockily, hands palmed into hip pockets, dressy new chaps sweeping back from his legs as if he were flying. On this one is written: My Cowboy."

My mother is frequent in the companion album, too, the one evidently begun by my father when he still lived off and on at the Doig homestead in the mountains above the Sixteen Canyon. Its pictorial record ranges from the Pacific Coast—Dad and Clifford Shearer, dubiously atop shoreline boulders the sopping winter they spent piling lumber in Aberdeen, Washington—to the Moss Agate ranch near Ringling where my father courted my mother. Small mysteries ask themselves whenever I go through these age-tanned shots. My father in cowboy hat and boots and with jeans rolled to four-inch cuffs sits on the front step of the log homestead house with his brother Claude and their riding buddy, Charlie Smith: what is the book Dad holds open in his hands, and why? Nine horsebackers are thundering pell-mell through the railroad village of Sixteen; one mount is being ridden double,
2-Atheneum Pub. Kelso-14-16 x 24 Caslon mck a colt trails another, a fearless dog is racing amid the hooves, there is a boy in a flat cap running a crowding second to the lead rider, who seems to be wearing a white sailor cap. What event can this be? Which ramp-ger is my book-toting father of a few pages earlier?
Who of those homesteaders of the Sixteen country was skilled enough with a camera of the time to capture this cascade of motion without blur?

The large final album, my grandmother’s, opens to a surprising sequence: my mother and father in pose after pose in front of tepee or tent. This time it is my father’s words, spoken, which carry this part of their past into This House of Sky: “The first summer there on Grassy, we moved camp fifty-eight times in the first sixty days. We had a brand new box camera we were awful proud of, and we’d take a picture of our campsite every time.” Fifteen of those sheepcamp sites survive on the front and back of a single album page, one or the other of my parents in front of canvas walls while the other clicks the shutter, and elsewhere in my inherited collection is the tantalizing shot of this bunch:
both of my parents together, there on Grass Mountain that first summer of their marriage—it cannot be half a century ago, yet it is—the best picture ever taken of the two of them. By whom? Their camp tender from the Dogie ranch? Johnny Gruar, the association rider on the mountain pasture adjoining theirs? My grandmother, one of the times she rode horseback the twenty miles from Moss Agate to visit?

The sum of the albums and their over flow is, by rapid count, about five hundred photos. The pictures go back as far as they can: a baby portrait of my grandmother, born in 1893. Then one of her holding my mother at the age of perhaps six months, in 1913. In my father’s earliest, he is in his late teens—1916, ’17,
’18?—standing atop the woodpile with four of his brothers and his sister, Doigs nearly as plentiful as the firewood under them. My own appearance into all this seems to reveal me from the very start as a straddler of generations—at age three in 1942, riding a tricycle in one shot and a horse in the next. As ravishing a cast of characters as we are, though, edges and backdrops are what capture my memory. Old truths stand stark in lens light. That the rusty metal sheeting which covered the shed beside our house in Ringling made it the sorriest-looking structure in town, which is saying a lot. That Wall Mountain, its long cusp of stone on the horizon above the Doig homestead, still is as striking as any landmark I have seen in the west of America. That around the log-and-chink homestead house amid sagebrush and shale, my Scottish grandparents put up a picket fence.

And it is a fortunate sum, for when I set out to write This House of Sky I found that photographs were the only consistent documentation there was of us. I possessed a few hours each of tape-recorded talk with my father and grandmother, but as to linear evidence of the course of our three lives, we inadvertently had mother, one of the times she rode horseback the twenty miles from Moss Agate to visit?

The sum of the albums and their overflow is, by rapid count, about five hundred photos. The pictures go back as far as they can: a baby portrait of my grandmother, born in 1893. Then one of her holding my mother at the age of perhaps six months, in 1913. In my father's earliest, he is in his late teens—1916, '17, '18?—standing atop the woodpile with four of his brothers and his sister, Doigs nearly as plentiful as the firewood under them. My own appearance into all this seems to reveal me from the very start as a straddler of generations—at age three in 1942, riding a tricycle in one shot and a horse in the next. As ravishing a cast of characters as we are, though, edges and backdrops are what capture my memory. Old truths stand stark in lens light. That the rusty metal sheeting which covered the shed beside our house in Ringling made it the sorriest-looking structure in town, which is saying a lot. That Wall Mountain, its long cusp of stone on the horizon above the Doig homestead, still is as striking as any land form I have seen in the west of America. That around the log-and-chink homestead house amid sagebrush and shale, my Scottish grandparents put up a picket fence.

And it is a fortunate sum, for when I set out to write _This House of Sky_ I found that photographs were the only consistent documentation there was of us. I possessed a few hours each of tape-recorded talk with my father and grandmother, but as to linear evidence of the course of our three lives, we inadvertently had covered our tracks. When Grandma made a periodic attack on the musk of our household, letters were fed to the stove. Dad's dealings when he ran sheep on shares or contracted to put up hay usually were based on a handshake. I am the family's sole diarist (it perhaps takes three generations to make one) and I began at it only ten years ago, my father already passed from us by then. So it was more vital than I knew, that evening a year or so before her own death in 1974, when my grandmother and I put the labels on her photographic preserves. As told in _This House of Sky_: "Picture upon picture of my father and mother...brought snuffles or hard-swallowed sentences from Grandma, and by the time I had jotted my notes on the final page, the emotion she had been putting into the room had worn me out. _That should be enough for tonight_, I said in a weary glaze. She turned to me in surprise: _But we got these others to get through_. _Hadn't we just as well keep on_? And we did."

The camera continues to tell me much of what I need to know to write. When Carol and I were married in 1965, with her came the dowry of her elderly Argus C44. It had wandered Europe with her—undoubtedly sharpening the respect with which Grandma and Dad and I peered into its lens as Christmases were clicked
5-Atheneum Pub. Kelso-14-16 x 24 Caslon mck into commemoration—and suddenly our pictured selves were bright with color. The Argus studied my home areas of Montana for me for This House of Sky; the Olympic Peninsula of Washington for Winter Brothers; and for The Sea Runners, southeast Alaska and the Queen Charlotte Islands, where it caught a fatal dose of rain. Currently Carol wields a Pentax, as full of exposure lights as a traffic signal and with range-finding lines and arcs that would outfit a bomb sight. The novel I am writing now needs a Montana town of the 1930’s, and my wife and her pluperfect Pentax are its builders: houses from Fort Benton, Augusta’s old square-front merc, a Chateau haberdashery, the creamery in Conrad. The town needs a setting, and she and her lens pal collect the mountains and benchlands and creeks and coulees for my version of the Two Medicine country. Evidently we made more than one marriage at that ceremony eighteen years ago—the two of us, and typewriter ribbon and film.

There is one further angle of the camera in my life and work, and it is the unexpected veer of the lens toward me. Since the publication of This House of Sky I very so often will open pages into a book review or interview and find myself gazing at myself. The unlikiest possible substitute for my words, yet evidently a fee that must be paid to the camera for all its previous help to me—my face for the world to see. Lately, with something between bemusement and alarm I notice that this bearded mug which is me keeps getting gray er and Scotcher. Yet why not. All said and done, a photograph is a knowing wink from the eye of time.

Now arrives the latest in This House of Sky’s lineage of albums: Duncan Kelso’s picturing of the country of my book. The land of the homestead near Sixteen is herein, and Grass Mountain, where my parents began their married life with that shepherding summer, and the Castle Mountains my grandmother lived in sight of during so much of her Montana ranch life; Duncan Kelso worked his feet as well as his shutter finger. Nor did he neglect either of the tiny communities which have been metropolises of the imagination to me, Ringling and Dupuyer; nor the fencelines where hawks sit sentinel and the wind tries barbwire for a harp; nor the magical Stockmen Bar in White Sulphur Springs, where Pete McCabe presided perfectly behind the bar and The Weavers on the jukebox wished Irene the greatest good night there ever was or will be. The best praise I can give Duncan is that his photographs have something of the same effect on me as those within my family’s quartet of albums: I not only see his pictures, I begin to hear them.

Ivan Doig
Seattle, March 1983
Introduction

Shortly after my fortieth birthday I found myself enmeshed in several crises that often accompany that milestone. While I was in a hospital recovering from minor surgery and devoting entirely too much thought to my plight, my wife brought me a copy of Ivan Doig's This House of Sky. The impact was immediate and, as it has turned out, long-lived.

This House of Sky affected me like no other book I'd ever read, but I could not explain my feelings. When I left the hospital, I called Ivan to rave about the book and to see if I could arrange to meet him. Although he appreciated my compliments, Ivan was deep in writing The Sea Runners, and as he was probably used to dealing with such undefined enthusiasm as mine, he suggested that I call back in two months. Frustrated in trying to honor Ivan's request, I wrote a letter, and was finally able to pinpoint some of my emotions.
4-Atheneum Pub. Kelso-14-16 x 24 Caslon . mck

A few days before entering the hospital, I printed some negatives that I had recently shot in eastern Washington, where I was raised. While writing the letter, I realized that Ivan's descriptions of the Montana landscape had evoked the same excitement that I felt watching my childhood valley emerge in the darkroom. Making the prints and reading the book took place in the same week, but were totally unrelated, except in the resultant images and emotions. The effect was so powerful I had to talk to Ivan Doig.

As agreed, I called two months later to tell him I was going to Montana to photograph his childhood landscape. He thanked me for the compliment, wished me luck, and expressed an interest in seeing the results.

As I left my familiar house of gray, sodden overcast, more commonly known as Seattle, for the house of sky, the total uncertainty of the outcome of this venture struck me. My arrival in White Sulphur Springs did not bolster my confidence in the project. The town was "unlovely but interesting," as Ivan had warned, the sky was as wet as Seattle's, and the drive had left me with a splitting headache. Many beers in the Stockmen Bar and the smell of wet sagebrush helped me slip into sleep with the thought that I would take things as they came.

The morning did not bring the expected sky, but I made the best of the all-too-familiar moisture and mist and drove a back road through the Castle Mountains waiting for the weather to clear. Around noon the skies dried and thus began three of the most high energy days I've ever spent. Armed with Ivan's book, a road map, and intuition, I found the haunts, basins, summits, and "places" of This House of Sky. The images in the book flowed one after the other. Ivan did not embellish a thing. Clouds and thunderstorms developed on cue to complete the picture.

My last night, before going north to Dupuyer, was spent on the summit of Grass Mountain, where I watched the Smith River Valley move through innumerable changes of light. I've spent much time in wilderness, and although Grass Mountain is not considered wilderness, that night changed my definition of vast.

I left White Sulphur Springs the next morning knowing that I had received more than I had expected. The experience around Dupuyer was not as powerful; still, everything was there as Ivan had written. The trip back to Seattle was a joy, knowing what I had on film. I was so photographically drained that I did not take one picture while driving through Glacier National Park, one of the most scenic areas in North America.

I relived the trip with each printing session as I made my way through the negatives. When the set was complete, I called Ivan, who consented to look at them. He also gave his permission for me to pursue a publisher for a book combining passages from This House of Sky... warned, the sky was as wet as Seattle's, and the drive had left me with a splitting headache. Many beers in the Stockmen Bar and the smell of wet sagebrush helped me slip into sleep with the thought that I would take things as they came.

The morning did not bring the expected sky, but I made the best of the all-too-familiar moisture and mist and drove a back road through the Castle Mountains waiting for the weather to clear. Around noon the skies dried and thus began three of the most high energy days I've ever spent. Armed with Ivan's book, a road map, and intuition, I found the haunts, basins, summits, and "places" of This House of Sky. The images in the book flowed one after the other. Ivan did not embellish a thing. Clouds and thunderstorms developed on cue to complete the picture.

My last night, before going north to Dupuyer, was spent on the summit of Grass Mountain, where I watched the Smith River Valley move through innumerable changes of light. I've spent much time in wilderness, and although Grass Mountain is not considered wilderness, that night changed my definition of vast.

I left White Sulphur Springs the next morning knowing that I had received more than I had expected. The experience around Dupuyer was not as powerful; still, everything was there as Ivan had written. The trip back to Seattle was a joy, knowing what I had on film. I was so photographically drained that I did not take one picture while driving through Glacier National Park, one of the most scenic areas in North America.

I relived the trip with each printing session as I made my way through the negatives. When the set was complete, I called Ivan, who consented to look at them. He also gave his permission for me to pursue a publisher for a book combining passages from This House of Sky with my photographs.

Such a book would not be complete without winter, so in mid-January I set off again for White Sulphur Springs. My arrival this time was heralded by an immediate drop in the temperature to twenty degrees below zero. My car, used to the maritime influence of the Japanese Current, refused to run and the trip turned into one of survival. The residents of White Sulphur Springs took the weather in stride while I did my best to stay alive without letting on I was from the Pacific Northwest. I finally had my car towed into the warmth of a service garage where it was coaxed to life after a few hours of thawing. Since the forecast was for even lower temperatures I decided it was time to beat a retreat. On the way out of town I stopped a number of times to photograph, but I did not turn off the engine. The record was complete.

Many thanks to Ivan Doig, Tom Stewart, and Liz Darhapsf, who weathered my persistence, and to Montana, which has remained constant in the face of change and crisis.

Duncan Kelso
Seattle, 1983
Beginning when his legs were long enough to straddle a horse's back, Dad had spent all but a few years of his life riding out after cattle and sheep across the gray sage distances of the Smith River Valley and the foothill country hunkered all around it.

Valley 1

It is not known just when in the 1860's the first white pioneers trickled into our area of south-central Montana, into what would come to be called the Smith River Valley. But if the earliest of them wagoned in on a day when the warm sage smell met the nose and the clear air lensed close the details of peaks two days' ride from there, what a glimpse into glory it must have seemed. Mountains stood up blue-and-white into the vigorous air. Closer slopes of timber offered the logs to hew; homestead cabins from. Sage grouse nearly as large as hen turkeys whirred from their hiding places. And the expanse of it all: across a dozen miles and for almost forty along its bowed length, this home valley of the Smith River country lay open and still as a gray inland sea, held by buttes and long ridges at its northern and southern ends, and east and west by mountain ranges.

Mountain 1

... the range to the west, the Big Belts, can cast some unease of its own on the valley. The highest peak of the range—penned into grandness on maps as Mount Edith, but always simply Old Baldy to those of us who lived with mountain upon mountain—thrusts up a bare summit with a giant crater gouged in its side. Even in hottest summer, snow lies in the great pock of crater like a patch on a gape of wound. Always, then, there is this reminder that before the time of men, unthinkable forces broke apart the face of the biggest landform the eye can find from any inch of the valley.

Mountain 2

... the Castle Mountains, seen so in the long light of time, make a goblin horizon for the sun to rise over ...

Mountain 3

... Grass Mountain grows its trees and grass in a pattern tipped upside down from every other mountain in sight. Instead of rising leisurely out of bunchgrass slopes which give way to timber reaching down from the crest, Grassy is darkly cowled with timber at the bottom and opens into a wide generous pasture—a brow of prairie some few thousand feet higher than any prairie ought to be, all the length of its gentle summit.

Valley 9

The country's arithmetic tells it. The very floor of the Smith River Valley rests one full mile above sea level. Many of the homesteads were set into the foothills hundreds of feet above that. The cold, storm-making mountains climb thousands of feet more into the clouds bellying over the Continental Divide to the west. Whatever the prospects might seem in a dreamy look around, the settlers were trying a slab of lofty country which often would be too cold and dry for their upon mountain—thrusts up a bare summit with a giant crater gouged in its side. Even in hottest summer, snow lies in the great pock of crater like a patch on a gape of wound. Always, then, there is this reminder that before the time of men, unthinkable forces broke apart the face of the biggest landform the eye can find from any inch of the valley.

Mountain i

... the Castle Mountains, seen so in the long light of time, make a goblin horizon for the sun to rise over ...

Mountain 3

... Grass Mountain, grows its trees and grass in a pattern tipped upside down from every other mountain in sight. Instead of rising leisurely out of bunchgrass slopes which give way to timber reaching down from the crest, Grassy is darkly cowled with timber at the bottom and opens into a wide generous pasture—a brow of prairie some few thousand feet higher than any prairie ought to be, all the length of its gentle summit.

Valley 9

The country's arithmetic tells it. The very floor of the Smith River Valley rests one full mile above sea level. Many of the homesteads were set into the foothills hundreds of feet above that. The cold, storm-making mountains climb thousands of feet more into the clouds bellying over the Continental Divide to the west. Whatever the prospects might seem in a dreamy look around, the settlers were trying a slab of lofty country which often would be too cold and dry for their crops, too open to a killing winter for their cattle and sheep.

Basin 1

A moment, cup your hands together and look down into them, and there is a ready map of what these homesteading families had in mind. The contours and life lines in your palms make the small gulches and creeks angling into the center of the Basin. The main flow of water, Spring Creek, drops down to squirt out there where the bases of your palms meet, the pass called Spring Gulch. Towards these middle crinkles, the settlers clustered in for sites close to water and, they hoped, under the wind. The braid of lines, now, which runs square across between palms and wrists can be Sixteen-mile Creek, the canyoned flow which gives the entire rumpled region its name—_the sixteen country_. Thumbs and the upward curl of your fingers represent the mountains and steep ridges all around. Cock the right thumb a bit outward and it reigns as Wall Mountain does, proving its rimrock out and over the hollowed land below. And on all that cupping rim of unclaimed high country, the Scots families surely instructed one another time and again, countless bands of sheep could find summer grass.

Basin 8

Until the Depression and old age at last forced him out, D.L.
could be found there in the Basin, a round deep-bearded muser fussing over his prize chickens, sending someone down to the railroad tracks in the Sixteen Canyon to fetch the jug of whiskey consigned for him each week, and asking not one thing more of the universe.
6-Atheneum Pub. Kelso-12-14 x 2-4 Caslon Old .... mck
Winter 1

Those homesteading Scots families of the Basin—Doigs, Christisons, Mitchells, a few who came later—could not know it at first, but they had taken up land where the longstanding habits and laws of settlement in America were not going to work. For one thing, this: the homestead staked out by Peter and Annie Doig lay amid the Big Belts at an elevation of 5700 feet. At first, the hill country did pay off with its summers of free pasture. In the bargain, however, came Januaries and Februaries—and too often Marches and Aprils—of hip-deep snow drifts.

Basin 2

The homestead sites my father could point out to me by the dozen—place upon place, and our own family soil among them—in almost all cases turned out to be not the seed acres for yeoman farms amid the sage, nor the first pastures of tidy family ranches. Not that at all. They turned out to be landing sites, quarters to hold people until they were able to scramble away to somewhere else. Quarters, it could be said, that did for that region of rural America what the tenements of the immigrant ghettos did for city America.

Basin 5

The young wife from Perthshire could hear the howling of wolves and coyotes—and worse, the splitting cracks of thunder when lightning storms cut down on the Big Belts. To the end of her life, she claimed she never could forget those unruly sounds of the Basin, nor its isolation.

Winter 2

It became the winter which the Basin people afterward would measure all other winters against. The dark timbered mountains around them went white as icebergs. The tops of sagebrush vanished under drifts. And up around the bodies of bawling livestock, the wind twirled a deadlier and deadlier web of snow.

Town 5

The Stockmen Bar started us for the night. Just walking through its door stepped you up onto a different deck of life. ... Next door stood the Melody Lane, with a neon cheeriness about it which probably was supposed to go with the name... It was the kind of enterprise better suited to mixed drinks than beer, and Dad and I seldom invested much time there.

Town 4

White Sulphur was as unlovely but interesting as the sounds of its livelihood... Sited where the northern edge of the valley began to rumple into low hills—by an early-day entrepreneur who dreamed of getting rich from the puddles of mineral water bubbling there, and didn't—White Sulphur somehow had stretched itself awkwardly along the design of a very wide T.

Town 6

One last landmark from those years, the gray stone house called the Castle... A man named Sherman had built it in
Winter 2

It became the winter which the Basin people afterward would measure all other winters against. The dark timbered mountains around them went white as icebergs. The tops of sagebrush vanished under drifts. And up around the bodies of bawling livestock, the wind twirled a deadlier and deadlier web of snow.

Town 5

The Stockmen Bar started us for the night. Just walking through its door stepped you up onto a different deck of life. . . . Next door stood the Melody Lane, with a neon cheeriness about it which probably was supposed to go with the name. . . . It was the kind of enterprise better suited to mixed drinks than beer, and Dad and I seldom invested much time there.

Town 4

White Sulphur was as unlovely but interesting as the sounds of its livelihood. . . . Sited where the northern edge of the valley began to rumple into low hills—by an early-day entrepreneur who dreamed of getting rich from the puddles of mineral water bubbling there, and didn’t—White Sulphur somehow had stretched itself awkwardly along the design of a very wide T.

Town 6

One last landmark from those years, the gray stone house called the Castle. . . . A man named Sherman had built it in the early 1890's, with bonanza money from a silver lode in the Castle Mountains. . . . From a little distance, the three-story mansion with its round tower and sharp roof peaks looked like one of the sets of fantasy pinnacles which poke up all through that range.

Winter 3

The highway down the valley was bare, a black dike above the snow, as he drove the pickup to the turnoff toward Battle Creek. Then the white drifts stretched in front of us like a wide storm-frothed lake whose waves had suddenly stopped motion to hang in billows and peaks where the wind had lashed them against the sky.

Sky 1

I glance higher for some hint of the weather, and the square of air broadens and broadens to become the blue expanse over Montana rangeland, so vast and vaulting that it rears, from the foundation-line of the plains horizon, to form the walls and roof of all of life’s experience that my younger self could imagine, a single great house of sky.

Town 1

Ringling lay on the land, twenty miles to the south of White Sulphur Springs, as the imprint of what had been a town, like the yellowed outline on grass after a tent has been taken down. . . . By the time Grandma and I moved there, Ringling stood as only a spattered circle of houses around several large weedy foundations. The adult population was about 50 persons, almost all of them undreamably old to me, and the livelihoods were a saloon, a gas station, a post office, Mike Ryan’s store, the depot, and exactly through the middle of town, the railroad tracks which glinted and fled instantly in both directions.
Grandma and I went into our first winter together. A small window faced straight west just above the head of my bed. Now this window also told the weather, even without my looking all the way out; mewls of wind came sneaking under the sash, and on genuine blizzard mornings the sill would have its own miniature snowscape, tiny sifts white as spilled sugar.

Town 2

Shivery and caging as such blizzard weather was, it had to be admitted that Ringling looked much its best in a storm. The bald gaps between houses lost their starkness with windows of snow gracefully coned between them. The very whiteness of a snowstorm came as a relief, a bright sudden paint over the worn town.

North 4

We came up over the crest and were walled to a stop. The western skyline before us was filled high with a steel-blue army of mountains, drawn in battalions of peaks and reefs and gorges and crags as far along the entire rim of the earth as could be seen. Summit after summit bladed up thousands of feet as if charging into the air to strike first at storm and lightning, valleys and clefts chasm’d wide as if split and hollowed by thunderblast upon thunderblast.

North 5

All the obliques of our valley life seemed to have been erased and redrawn here as ruler-edged plateaus of grassland, furrowed panels of grainfield, arrowing roads, creeks nosing quick and bright from the Rockies. The clean lines of this fresh landscape everywhere declared purpose and capacity, seemed to trumpet: Here are the far bounds, all the extent anyone could need. Now live up to them.

North 6

... Dupuyer lay tucked along a broad band of brush which marked its namesake creek. Off from either side of the highway, which doubled for an instant as the main street, a few dozen houses and buildings lined away, like a Ringling which had been ordered to close in its ranks and paint itself up toward respectability. The first of the town’s businesses we came to had one sign advertising it as a gas station, and another declaring it a cafe, as if the enterprise hadn’t entirely been able to make up its mind and decided to take on both jobs.

North 7

The state highway department sternly put up a white cross wherever an auto victim died, and some curves on the highway here north of Dupuyer were beginning to look like little country graveyards.

North 8

The Reservation country yielded two items: earth to navigate over, and the bunchgrass, sprouting like countless elfin quivers of white-tipped arrows, to nourish the sheep. All else of life
... Dupuyer lay tucked along a broad band of brush which marked its namesake creek. Off from either side of the highway, which doubled for an instant as the main street, a few dozen houses and buildings lined away, like a Ringling which had been ordered to close in its ranks and paint itself up toward respectability. The first of the town's businesses we came to had one sign advertising it as a gas station, and another declaring it a cafe, as if the enterprise hadn't entirely been able to make up its mind and decided to take on both jobs.

North 7

The state highway department sternly put up a white cross wherever an auto victim died, and some curves on the highway here north of Dupuyer were beginning to look like little country graveyards.

North 8

The Reservation country yielded two items: earth to navigate over, and the bunchgrass, sprouting like countless elfin quivers of white-tipped arrows, to nourish the sheep. All else of life had to be fetched, if it first could be found.

Duncan Kelso is a photographer, writer, and environmental planning consultant living in Seattle. He grew up in Montana, northern California, and eastern Washington and has an affinity for the American west, wilderness, mountaineering, and Alaska. He was a photographer for The Boeing Company for five years and a teaching assistant in photography in the University of Washington's College of Architecture. He holds degrees from Dartmouth College and the University of Washington, and his work has been published in several Seattle magazines. This is his first book.

Ivan Doig was born in White Sulphur Springs, Montana, and lives in Seattle, Washington. He has worked as a ranch hand, newspaperman, and magazine editor and writer. His 1978 book, This House of Sky, was nominated for the National Book Award in contemporary thought. A public-television documentary has been made of his 1980 book, Winter Brothers, and his first novel, The Sea Runners, was published in 1982. He now is at work on a novel set in Montana.

The book also was honored with a Christopher Award and a Pacific Northwest Booksellers Association Award for Excellence, and chosen by a poll of readers of Montanâ—the Magazine of Western History as one of the five best books ever written about Montana.
May 23, 1983

Mr. Ivan Doig
17021 Tenth Avenue, N.W.
Seattle, Washington  98177

Dear Ivan,

Here's a set of proofs of the text of INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY. One change is evident: on the contents page, you must be identified as the author of "The Eye of Time" and Duncan as the author of "Introduction"; and your dedication must go in, which means adding initials after each. Another set of proofs has gone to Duncan. We'll also have to make sure the copyright page is changed to reflect the copyright on the new material, yours and Duncan's.

I've thought and thought about the snapshots, and finally think that it's not a good idea to use them -- that they're terrific, but that this book's illustrations ought to be all on the large scale of Duncan's photographs, that part of the point is his (and others') response, as a non-member of your family, to the story and the land and the people.

Best,

Thomas A. Stewart
Editor in Chief
Duncan—FYL. Beyond what I've told Tom here, everything looks OK to me. Hope you're pleased with the big handsome look of the front matter.

I'm still putting together Montana plans, and I think it's simplest to just keep Liz posted of my whereabouts, should you need to get in touch with me about anything. Roughly, I'll be there 19 June-25 July.

What would you think about going together on a signed copy for Tony and Noel, when we get books? (I guess you know that books usually are available a month or so before pub date. Pub date doesn't have much actual meaning, but if we can, we ought to meet for lunch. Life doesn't offer so many pub dates we can afford to ignore 'em.)

see you

Dear Tom—

Decision accepted, about not putting the snapshots in INSIDE (inside INSIDE?). The proofs look quite clean to me. I made one small change in "Eye of Time," in a way that I don't think will jiggle the line length any. I also put on these proofs the insertions for my dedication, Duncan and I onto the contents page, etc., just so you can have a record of whether we're operating on the same assumptions.

I did beef up my bio note with more HOUSE OF SKY/Montana mention. If there's any problem of length, I'd say cut the second sentence—the "ranch hand—editor—etc." stuff—or even the ones about WINTER BROTHERS or SEA RUNNERS; but we definitely ought to have in as much about the track record of HOUSE OF SKY as we can. Specifically, the Montana flag of History selection of SKY as "one of five best books" is probably the best credential we can present; that magazine is the prime one of its kind—i.e., has an audience of West-lovers who buy books—and its home organization, the Montana Historical Society, is probably going to be the flagship store for INSIDE; tons of tourists pass through the Society's bookstore across from the state capitol in Helena, and the Society's own members copiously buy books out of its Xmas catalogue. (several thousand)

And I tacked on the reference about ENGLISH CREEK "to be published in 1945" because we'd do well to start building anticipation of it. If you're uncomfortable with the '45 promise tacked on, untack it. But I'm entirely confident we'll have the book then, and it'll be SON OF HOUSE SKY OF SKY.

That's about all I know at the moment. Will be in touch before Carol and I head to Montana on June 19.

best
April 27, 1983

Mr. Ivan Doig
17021 Tenth Avenue N.W.
Seattle, Washington 98177

Dear Ivan,

Here are two jacket proofs for you. Again, as in the xerox I sent, the background, or "frame," will be a darker, less silvery, grey.

Best,

Ann Rittenberg
Assistant to Tom Stewart
May 11, 1983

Dear Ivan:

Here you go. My apologies for the slow return of these materials.

Again, thanks for thinking of me with this story; I sincerely hope that you'll consider the door open again in the future.

Best regards,

Scott Forslund
Assoc. Ed.
The Eye of Time
by Ivan Doig

Of the three of us, it was my grandmother who preserved the photographs, as automatically diligent as if she was canning garden vegetables to carry us through the worst months of winter. The albums even had their own sort of cellar: the dark and dust beneath the bed my father and I shared. Gee gosh, someday—the announcement always meant under-the-bed diving was being done, she was retrieving one or another album in which to put this year’s school picture of me as a startlingly pompadoured sixth-grader or one of my father in unbuckled overshoes beside his latest obstetrical miracle, triplet purebred Hereford calves, or of Grandma herself posed beside the Jeep with her beloved but fidgety sheepdogs,
Spot and Tip, ambivalently atop the hood. A photo is its own moment, blind to the future. In those Montana years none of us had so much as a hint that the albums would be the main witnesses to Bessie Ringer and Charlie Doig and myself as I worked at the writing of This House of Sky, and that the someday when the four black-paged collections would have a handier existence on an actual reachable shelf is only now, in my house in a Seattle suburban valley.

What demeans me whenever I bring out this photographic poundage is that during the fifteen years my father and my mother's mother and I were a family, we didn't own a camera. The evidence of our existence does thin out dangerously during the middle of that period—not a single photo dating from the three years we spent on a bleak leased ranch south of Dupyer; testimony unto itself, perhaps, about that woebegone damn place—but just often enough, somebody snapped a shot and thought to provide us a print.

It is the time before, the black-and-white era when my mother was alive, that the camera eye steadily took in Doig and Ringer family life. Two of the four albums were my mother's, her handwriting across the top of many of the photos. Blessed I am that she shared my habit of scribbling annotation. To me, the effective writing in this 1928 scene from This House of Sky is not mine but hers:

"It was the Fourth of July celebration in White Sulphur Springs, and they took the town.... That holiday's snapshots show up in a happy flurry; every scene has been braided to its moment by her looping writing. Ready for the Big Day: Dad and his brother Argus have doffed their black ten-gallon hats for the camera, grins in place under their slicked hair, and bandannas fluttering at their necks like flags of a new country. The Wildest Bunch in W.S.S.--seven of them from Ringling and the Basin are ganged along the side of a car, handrolled cigarettes angling out of the men's mouths, my mother and her cousin small prim fluffs in the dark cloudbank of cowboy hats.... There is another photo taken soon afterward, in which my father grins cockily, hands palmed into hip pockets, dressy new chaps sweeping back from his legs as if he were flying. On this one is written:

My Cowboy.

My mother is frequent in the companion album, too, the one evidently begun by my father when he still lived off and on at the Doig homestead in the mountains above the Sixteen Canyon. Its pictorial record ranges from the Pacific Coast--Dad and Clifford Shearer, dubiously atop shoreline boulders the sopping winter they spent piling lumber in Aberdeen, Washington--to the Moss Agate ranch near Ringling where my father courted my mother. Small mysteries ask themselves whenever I go through these age-tanned shots. My father in cowboy hat and boots and with jeans rolled to four-inch cuffs sits on the front step of the log homestead house with his brother Claude and their riding buddy, Charlie Smith: what is the book Dad holds open in his hands, and why? Nine horsebackers are thundering pell-mell through the railroad village of Sixteen; one mount is being ridden double, a colt trails another, a fearless dog is racing amid the hooves, there is a boy in a flat cap running, a crowding second to the lead rider, who seems to be wearing a white sailor cap. What event can this be?
Which rampager is my book-toting father of a few pages earlier?

Who of those homesteaders of the Sixteen country was skilled enough with a camera of the time to capture this cascade of motion without blur?

The large final album, my grandmother's, opens to a surprising sequence: my mother and father in pose after pose in front of tepee or tent. This time it is my father's words, spoken, which carry this part of their past into This House of Sky. The first summer there on Grassy, we moved camp fifty-eight times in the first sixty days.

We had a brand new box camera we were awful proud of, and we'd take a picture of our campsite every time." Fifteen of those sheepcamp sites survive on the front and back of a single album page, one or the other of my parents in front of canvas walls while the other clicks the shutter, and elsewhere in my inherited collection is the tantalizing shot of this bunch: both of my parents together, there on Grass Mountain that first summer of their marriage--it cannot be half a century ago, yet it is--the best picture ever taken of the two of them. By whom? Their camp tender from the Dogie ranch? Johnny Gruar, the association rider on the mountain pasture adjoining theirs?
My grandmother, one of the times she rode the twenty miles from Moss Agate to visit?

The sum of the albums and their overflow is, by rapid count, about 300 photos. The pictures go back as far as they can: a baby portrait of my grandmother, born in 1893. Then one of her holding my mother at the age of perhaps six months, in 1913. In my father's earliest, he is in his late teens--1916, '17, '18?--standing atop the woodpile with four of his brothers and his sister, Doigs nearly as plentiful as the firewood under them. My own appearance into all this seems to reveal me from the very start as a straddler of generations--at age three in 1912, riding a tricycle in one shot and a horse in the next. As ravishing a cast of characters as we are, though, edges and backdrops are what capture my memory. Old truths stand stark in the lens light. That the rusty metal sheeting which covered the shed beside our house in Ringling made it the sorriest-looking structure in town, which was saying a lot. That Wall Mountain, its long cusp of stone on the horizon above the Doig homestead, still is as striking as any landmark I have seen in the west of America. That around the log-and-chink homestead house amid sagebrush and shale, my Scottish grandparents put up a picket fence.

And it is a fortunate sum, for when I set out to write This House of Sky I found that photographs were the only consistent documentation there was of us. I possessed a few hours each of tape-recorded talk with my father and grandmother, but as to linear evidence of the course of our three lives, we inadvertently had covered our tracks. When Grandma made a periodic attack on the muss of our household, letters were fed to the stove. Dad’s dealings when he ran sheep on shares or contracted to put up hay usually were based on a handshake. I am the family’s sole diarist (it perhaps takes three generations to make one) and I began at it only ten years ago, my father already passed from us by then. So it was more vital than I knew, that evening a year or so before her own death in 1974, when my grandmother and I put the labels on her photographic preserves. From This House of Sky: "Picture upon picture of my father and mother...brought sniffles or hard-swallowed sentences from Grandma, and by the time I had jotted my notes on the final page, the emotion she had been putting into the room had worn me out. That should be enough for tonight, I said in a weary glaze. She turned to me in surprise: But we got these others to get through. Hadn't we just as well keep on? And we did."

The camera continues to tell me much of what I need to know to write. When Carol and I were married in 1965, with her came the dowry of her elderly Argus CLII. It had wandered Europe with her—undoubtedly sharpening the respect with which Granima and Dad and I peered into its lens as Christmases were clicked into commemoration—and suddenly our pictured selves were bright with color. The Argus studied my home areas of Montana for me for This House of Sky; the Olympic Peninsula of Washington for Winter Brothers; and for The Sea southeast. Alaska and the Queen Charlotte Islands, where it caught a fatal dose of rain. Currently Carol wields a Pentax, as full of exposure lights as a traffic signal and with range-finding lines and arcs that would outfit a bombsight. The novel I am writing now needs a Montana town of the 1930's, and my wife and her pluperfect Pentax are its builders: houses from Fort Benton, Augusta's old square-front merc, a Choteau haberdashery, the creamery in Conrad. The town needs a setting, and she and her lens pal collect the mountains and benchlands and creeks and coulees for my version of the Two Medicine country. Evidently we made more than one marriage at that ceremony eighteen years ago—the two of us, and typewriter ribbon and film.

There is one further angle of the camera in my life and work, and it is the unexpected veer of the lens toward me. Since the publication of This House of Sky I every so often will open pages into a book review or interview and find myself gazing at myself. The unlikeliest possible substitute for my words, yet evidently a fee that must be paid to the camera for all its previous help to me—my face for the world to see. Lately, with something between bemusement and alarm I notice that this bearded mug which is me keeps getting grayer and Scotcher. Yet why not. All said and done, a photograph is a knowing wink from the eye of time.

Now arrives the latest in This House of Sky's lineage of albums:
Duncan Kelso's picturing of the country of my book. The land of the homestead near Sixteen is herein, and Grass Mountain where my parents began their married life with that shepherding summer, and the Castle Mountains my grandmother lived in sight of during so much of her Montana ranch life; Duncan Kelso worked his feet as well as his shutter finger. Nor did he neglect either of the tiny communities which have been metropolises of the imagination to me, Ringling and Dupuyer; nor the fencelines where hawks sit sentinel and the winds tries barbwire for a harp; nor the magical Stockman Bar in White Sulphur Springs, where Pete McCabe presided perfectly behind the bar and The Weavers on the jukebox wished Irene the greatest good night there ever was or will be. The best praise I can give Duncan is that his photographs have something of the same effect on me as those within my family's quartet of albums: I not only see his pictures, I begin to hear them.

Seattle, March 1983
Dear Tom——

The other day I finally dug down to the note to myself about a dedication for INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY. I checked with Duncan and found out he'd long since sent in his. So, I guess the amalgamated version (with the attendant problem of indicating whose dedication is which) would go like this:

To Gerry and Charlie,
who brought me to Montana,
and to Katy, who brought me Ivan.

—Duncan Kelso

And to three skilled builders
of This House of Sky:
Carol Hill, Ann Nelson, Marshall Nelson

—Ivan Doig

Seem reasonable to you? I've never de-dedicated before. But I think it is fitting to cite Carol Hill, for catching SKY when it came in through the transom, and my buddies the Nelsons who agented and lawyered it. Without the three of them, Duncan would have to be taking pictures of Louis L'Amour country.

ENGLISH CREEK is flowing. (Heh heh, little self-deprecating pun there...oh, never mind.) But it is shaping up. Last Wednesday I spent talking to two venerable forest rangers, whose fathers were both rangers too. I'm not sure I can spell verisimilitude, but I'm sure as hell trying to get some.

all best
Dedication Page.

To Gerry and Charlie,
who brought me to Montana,
and Katy, who brought me Ivan.

Ivan-

Gerry and Charlie are my deceased parents who brought me to Montana when I was 5 or so.

Katy is my wife who brought your book to me in the hospital.

Dediciation
Dear Duncan--

Your inscription looks dandy. I think if I set mine under it, and we each have a nifty italicized signature line, the page would look fine. It'd be something like this (let me know if you see any problem):

To Gerry and Charlie,
who brought me to Montana,
and to Katy, who brought me Ivan.

---Duncan Kelso

And to three skilled builders
of This House of Sky:
Carol Hill, Ann Nelson and Marshall Nelson

---Ivan Doig

I think all this would be more apropos than anything else we could do; besides my wife Carol, to whom Sky is dedicated, these three are the main people in having made the book happen--Carol Hill as the editor who bought the idea, Ann Nelson, the friend who agented it to her, Marshall Nelson the lawyer who shepherded the contract.

A couple of incidental scraps: from a friend of mine who edits Montana Magazine of History for the Montana Historical Society: "The flyer on Inside THOS looks great...I expect it will sell a bunch. Our merchandise people will place an order pronto." Probably the Historical Society Bookshop in Helena will indeed be our main seller of this book, or at least one of the top pushers of it; I'll be around there a few times this summer and nudge them on it. Also, I meant to pass along to you the name and number of the Atheneum director of publicity--Susan Richman, (212)486-2858. Sometimes ideas for promotion can be handled more quickly by going to Susan and her staff than through Tom and then to her.

best

[Signature]
4 May '83

Dear Duncan—

In the past week or so, scattered amid mind-glazing allergy pills and work on my novel, I've tried to flail away at a few things on INSIDE THOS's behalf. Just so you're informed, here's a quick rundown:

--I've written and sent a xerox of the cover to one of the prime Montana bookstores that for one reason or another aren't called on by the Atheneum rep.

--The German edition of SKY is in the translation process, supposedly for '84 publication; I have told that publisher, Insel Verlag, about INSIDE THOS and will ask Lis to send a copy there.

--Did you want back the proof sheet Mary Oregan sent, or was that an extra? Give me a message on the phone machine if you want it back.

--Just called Tom on other matters, asked him the price of the book: $27.50.

That's about it. Take care.
April 27, 1983

Duncan Kelso
1604 22nd Ave. East
Seattle, Washington 98112

Dear Duncan,

I'm sending you (enclosed) press proofs of the jacket of your book and some sample photographs.

I think they've all come out very well and I hope you agree, but in any case I'll want to hear from you as to what you think.

The jacket had to be proofed in time for our sales conference May 10th, and at the same time we thought the printer could test the duotone in a variety of photographs.

The jacket background color is much too light and silvery, and I'm sending you a swatch of the gray I gave the printer to match. They promise to correct this mistake when it comes time to print the finished jackets.

I'm working on the text design now, and once it's set in type I'll be able to work up a rough dummy of the entire book to send you. I think that'll be late May or early June.

I think we'll go on press some time late in August although it's hard to say exactly. Tom seemed doubtful as to whether Atheneum would pay your way out here for the press run, but you should take that up with him.

Spring seems to have arrived as of yesterday, and I hope it's finally here to stay. Hope Seattle hasn't been too wet.

Regards,

Mary Cregan
Inside This House of Sky
Photographs by Duncan Kelso / Text by Ivan Doig
Inside This House of Sky
Photographs by Duncan Kelso / Text by Ivan Doig
Inside This House of Sky

Photographs by Duncan Kelso / Text by Ivan Doig
Inside This House of Sky

Photographs by Duncan Kelso / Text by Ivan Doig
Inside This House of Sky

Photographs by Duncan Kelso / Text by Ivan Doig
Dear Sharon--

I've got a Christmas goodie coming, which my publisher--Atheneum--may already have made you aware of; but on the other hand, I've learned never to assume anything in the wonderworld of publishing.

It's going to be a photo book, INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY: 65 black-and-whites of THIS HOUSE OF SKY country, by a photog from here named Duncan Kelso; captions excerpted from SKY; and I've written an introductory essay. I'm enclosing a photocopy of the cover mock-up; the book will be a bit bigger than the mock-up.

Just wanted you to know. Other than that, the report is that the Montana 1930's novel I'm working on is coming nicely; will finish it by the end of this year, for fall '84 publication. (Atheneum again.)

Hope you're thriving. Will drop by whenever I next make it to Billings.

best
Dear Judy--

I've got a Christmas goodie coming, which my publisher--Atheneum--may already have made you aware of; but on the other hand, I've learned never to assume anything in the wonderworld of publishing.

It's going to be a photo book, INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY: 65 black-and-whites of THIS HOUSE OF SKY country, by a photog from here named Duncan Kelso who came and prowled around the White Sulphur and Sixteen country; captions excerpted from SKY; and I've written an introductory essay. I'm enclosing a photocopy of the cover mock-up; I think the book will be a bit bigger than the mock-up.

Just wanted you to know. Other than that, the report is that the Montana 1930's novel I'm working on is coming nicely; will finish it by the end of this year, for fall '84 publication. Also this: I don't know whether you've had much interest in my Alaska novel THE SEA RUNNERS, but Penguin will bring out the paperback this fall.

Hope you're thriving. Carol and I hope to be through Helena sometime this summer, will drop by when we do.

best
Dear Ivan,

I have read your finely-written introduction to your family album that will also accompany Duncan Kelso's photos for Inside this House of Sky. It is a beautiful introduction and I would very much like to have your writing in AMERICAN WEST, but I find that this introduction would appear too much as a fragment for a magazine piece, and as tempted as I might be, I think it would be too confusing for our readers. I toyed with the idea of trying to make it fit: taking some from your book and working in some of the material here in conjunction with selected photographs, but I concluded (not wanting to tamper with your carefully linked prose) that this would have to be a task for you, not for me.

That's a roundabout way of saying I would do almost anything to persuade you to make this work as you'd conceive it for a magazine piece, but that I cannot (or will not) attempt the editing task here.

I understand your focus on your novel at this juncture. We'll wait, and hope you'll find the space to contribute to us in the future. Our circulation will go to 140,000 at the first of the year. I think we have the audience that can fully appreciate your work.

Sincerely,

[Signature]

Nancy Meiselas

c.c. P.O. Box 40310
3033 N. Campbell Ave.
Tucson, Arizona 85717
(602) 881-5850
Dear Tom--

23 April '83

I savvy your decision about the photo essay. I had the feeling, working on it, that the more I tuned it up for the INSIDE book, the farther it got from possible magazine articlehood. So it goes.

Sounds like you and Am West are thriving. All best wishes.
April 13, 1983

Mr. Duncan Kelso
1604 22nd Avenue East
Seattle,
Washington 98112

Dear Duncan,

Here's a Xerox of an early jacket layout. Everything won't be so dark; and the grey behind the title won't be any darker than the grey behind the photograph. In a word, it's a stunner.

Best,

Ann Rittenberg
Assistant to
Thomas A. Stewart

cc: Ivan Doig
April 6, 1983

Dear Ivan,

Just a quick note to let you know that your preface and xeroxed pix have arrived (Liz and I enjoyed them both enormously), and I've just now finished sending them out to the various magazines. I think the combination of your piece, and Duncan's photographs combined with some of yours, makes a wonderful article, but we'll see what the "experts" say--

Best,

[Signature]

Nancy
Ivan Doig
17021 Tenth Avenue NW
Seattle, Washington  98177
Dear Bob—

I've got a Christmas goodie coming, which I assume the Atheneum sales rep has made you aware of—but on the other hand, I've learned never to assume anything in the wonderworld of publishing.

It's going to be a coffee table pic book: 65 black-and-white photos of THIS HOUSE OF SKY country, by a photographer here named Duncan Kelso; captions excerpted from SKY; and I've written an introductory essay of a couple thousand words. I'm enclosing a photocopy of the cover mock-up; the book will be bigger than the mock-up.

In case you don't regularly see the Atheneum sales rep, he is: John Rantala, (206) 337-1093. Or at the publishing house itself, I guess the guy to deal with is: Nat B. Zecher, Vice President, Sales, Atheneum, 597 Fifth Ave, NY NY 10017 (phone 212-486-2700).

Other than that, the report is that the Montana 1930's novel I'm working on is coming nicely; will finish it by the end of this year, for fall '84 publication. (Atheneum again.)

Hope you're thriving. Carol and I should be through Helena sometime this summer, will see you then.

best

p.s. I'd doubtful I can make it to Montana to sign copies of INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY this fall, but in fall of '84 I hope to come out and work like crazy on behalf of the novel. Maybe we can set up a reading or something in conjunction with selling that one?
Dear Mick,

I've got a Christmas goodie coming, which I assume the Atheneum sales rep has made your bookstore person aware of—but on the other hand, I've learned never to assume anything in the wonderworld of publishing.

It'll be a coffee table pic book: 65 black-and-white photos of THIS HOUSE OF SKY country, by a photog from here named Duncan Kelso; captions excerpted from SKY; and I've written an introductory essay of a couple thousand words. I'm enclosing a photocopy of the cover mock-up; the book itself will be bigger.

In case your bookstore isn't a regular stop for the Atheneum sales rep, he is: John Rantala, (206) 337-1093. Or at the publishing house itself, I guess the guy to deal with is: Nat B. Zecher, Vice President, Sales, Atheneum, 597 Fifth Ave. NY NY 10017 (phone 212-486-2700).

Other than that, the report is that my Montana forest ranger novel is progressing nicely, turning into a sort of fictional first cousin of THIS HOUSE OF SKY. Will finish it by the end of this year, for fall '88 publication. (Atheneum again.)

Hope you're thriving. Carol and I intend to spend about a month around Choteau this summer; you gonna be up there any time to visit your dinosaur diggers?

All best,

[Signature]
6 April '83

Dear Scott—

Okay, here's the piece—a couple of thousand words of introduction to the forthcoming photo book, INSIDE THIS HOUSE OF SKY. I'm also sending along some of the family pics which either are mentioned in the piece or helped inspire it and THIS HOUSE OF SKY; I don't know if they'll be of use to you but I thought you ought to see them, in case.

You wondered about seeing more of Duncan Kelso's photos. I think there'll be 65 in the book, so there are more; Duncan can be called at 621-1669 (work) or 323-6918 (home). I think he's also written a piece for the INSIDE book, about how he as a Seattle guy got written by Montana from a book written about it by another Seattle guy, me.

see you

p.s. Naturally you're free to edit the piece down considerably.

enc: 8 photos
April 5

Evan-

Thanks for sending your piece — I really like it.
And thanks for the praise.

Here is my short intro.

I think the book is taking shape and think the snippets will add a lot. Hope Tom feels fine.

Duncan
Dear Duncan--

Appreciated seeing your INSIDE intro. Looks good to me--states the history nicely. I guess I would make only 2 small suggestions, both in the second graf of p. 2:

--You mention "the Stockman's Bar"; this maybe ought to be checked against your pic of the place, if you haven't already, to see whether the sign says "Stockman's" or "Stockman's" or, as I remember it, "Stockman". I see in SKY I call it The Stockman, because that's what we referred to it as, whatever its sign said; but if it's easily done, perhaps your reference and the pic ought to jibe.

--I think I'd prefer to have the full context of my "unlovely" quote about White Sulphur: p. 81 of SKY, "unlovely but interesting". That would more accurately convey my ambivalence about the town--i.e., would keep in tone with my writing about it in SKY.

Other than that, dandy. A note to Tom's assistant, Ann Rittenberg, likely would be the quickest way to touch up these two points. I'll meanwhile apprise you of Tom's response to my INSIDE piece, as soon as I hear from him.

I've mailed the copy of my piece, and some prints of my family pics, to the ass't editor who wanted to see them at Pacific Northwest, Scott Forslund. He also wondered about more of your pics, so I gave him your phone numbers. I think, though, he's working within an editorial set of mind that Montana is a bit far east for Pacific Northwest. We shall see.

best

For the sake of constancy, I'll likely keep it "Stockman" in my own INSIDE piece--until Tom's copy editor shoots me down.
Introduction to Inside This House Of Sky

Shortly after my fortieth birthday I found myself enmeshed in several crises that often accompany that milestone. While I was in a hospital recovering from minor surgery and devoting entirely too much thought to my plight, my wife brought me a copy of Ivan Doig's This House Of Sky. The impact was immediate and, as it has turned out, long-lived.

This House Of Sky affected me like no other book I've ever read, but I could not explain my feelings. When I left the hospital, I called Ivan to rave about the book and to see if I could arrange to meet him. Although he appreciated my compliments, Ivan was deep in writing The Sea Runners, and as he was probably used to dealing with such undefined enthusiasm as mine, he suggested that I call back in two months. Frustrated in trying to honor Ivan's request, I wrote a letter, and was finally able to pinpoint some of my emotions.

A few days before entering the hospital, I printed some negatives that I had recently shot in eastern Washington, where I was raised. While writing the letter, I realized that Ivan's descriptions of the Montana landscape had evoked the same excitement that I felt watching my childhood valley emerge in the darkroom. Making the prints and reading the book took place in the same week, but were totally unrelated, except in the resultant images and emotions. The effect was so powerful I had to talk to Ivan Doig.

As agreed, I called two months later to tell him I was going to Montana to photograph his childhood landscape. He thanked me for the compliment, wished me luck, and expressed an interest in seeing the results.
As I left my familiar house of grey, sodden overcast, more commonly known as Seattle, for the house of sky, the total uncertainty of the outcome of this venture struck me. I did know one thing for sure - this was the first step towards the resolution of my crises.

My arrival in White Sulphur Springs did not bolster my confidence in the project. The town was "unlovely" as Ivan had warned, the sky was as wet as Seattle's, and the drive had left me with a splitting headache. Many beers in the Stockmen's Bar and the smell of wet sagebrush helped me slip into sleep with the thought that I would take things as they came.

The morning did not bring the expected sky, but I made the best of the all-too-familiar moisture and mist and drove a back road through the Castle Mountains waiting for the weather to clear. Around noon the skies dried and thus began three of the most high energy days I've ever spent. Armed with Ivan's book, a roadmap, and intuition, I found the haunts, basins, summits, and "places" of This House Of Sky. The images in the book flowed one after the other. Ivan did not embellish a thing. Clouds and thunderstorms developed on cue to complete the picture.

My last night, before going north to Dupuyer, was spent on the summit of Grass Mountain, where I watched the Smith River Valley move through innumerable changes of light. I've spent much time in wilderness, and although Grass Mountain is not considered wilderness, that night changed my definition of vast.

I left White Sulphur Springs the next morning knowing that I had received more than I had expected. The experience around Dupuyer was not as powerful; still, everything was there as Ivan had written. The trip back to Seattle was a joy, knowing what I had on film. I was so photographically drained that I did not take one picture while driving through Glacier National Park, one of the most scenic areas in North America.

I relived the trip with each printing session as I made my way through the negatives. When the set was complete, I called Ivan, who consented to look at them. He also gave his permission for me to pursue a publisher for a book combining passages from This House Of Sky with my photographs.

Such a book would not be complete without winter, so in mid-January I set off again for White Sulphur Springs. My arrival this time was heralded by an immediate drop in the temperature to twenty degrees below zero. My car, used to the maritime influence of the Japanese Current, refused to run and the trip turned into one of survival. The residents of White Sulphur Springs took the weather in stride while I did my best to stay alive without letting on I was from the Pacific Northwest. I finally had my car towed into the warmth of a service garage where it was coaxed to life after a few hours of thawing. Since the forecast was for even lower temperatures I decided it was time to beat a retreat. On the way out of town I stopped a number of times to photograph, but I did not turn off the engine. The record was complete.

Many thanks to Ivan Doig, Tom Stewart, and Liz Darhansoff who weathered my persistence, and to Montana, which has remained constant in the face of change and crisis.

Duncan Kelso
Seattle, 1983
Mother #1

\[
\begin{array}{c}
68 \\
103 \\
78 \\
327 \\
180 \\
507 \\
\end{array}
\]

Dado

G'mas
The Eye of Time
by Ivan Doig

Of the three of us, it was my grandmother who preserved the photographs, as automatically diligent as if she was canning garden vegetables to carry us through the white worst months of winter. The albums even had their own sort of cellar: the dark and dust beneath the bed my father and I shared. Gee gosh, someday—the announcement always meant under-the-bed diving was being done, she was retrieving one or another album in which to put this year's school picture of me as a startlingly pompadoured sixth-grader or one of my father in unbuckled overshoes beside his latest obstetrical miracle, triplet purebred Hereford calves, or of Grandma herself posed beside the Jeep with her beloved but fidgety sheepdogs,
Spot and Tip, ambivalently atop the hood. A photo is its own moment, blind to the future. In those Montana years none of us had so much as a hint that the albums would be the main witnesses to Bessie Ringer and Charlie Doig and myself as I worked at the writing of This House of Sky, and that the someday when the four black-paged collections would have a handier existence on an actual reachable shelf is only now, in my house in a Seattle suburban valley.

What dumfounds me whenever I bring out this photographic poundage is that during the fifteen years my father and my mother's mother and I were a family, we didn't own a camera. The evidence of our existence does thin out dangerously during the middle of that period—not a single photo dating from the three years we spent on a bleak leased ranch south of Dupuyer; testimony unto itself, perhaps, about that woebegone damn place—but just often enough, somebody snapped a shot and thought to provide us a print.

It is the time before, the black-and-white era when my mother was alive, that the camera eye steadily took in Doig and Ringer family life. Two of the four albums were my mother's, her handwriting across the top of many of the photos. Blessed I am that she shared my habit of scribbling annotation. To me, the effective writing in this 1928 scene from This House of Sky is not mine but hers:

"It was the Fourth of July celebration in White Sulphur Springs, and they took the town... That holiday's snapshots show up in a happy flurry; every scene has been braided to its moment by her looping writing. Ready for the Big Day: Dad and his brother Angus have doffed their black ten-gallon hats for the camera, grins in place under their slicked hair, and bandannas fluttering at their necks like flags of a new country. The Wildest Bunch in W.S.S.--seven of them from Ringling and the Basin are ganged along the side of a car, handrolled cigarettes angling out of the men's mouths, my mother and her cousin small prim fluffs in the dark cloudbank of cowboy hats.... There is another photo taken soon afterward, in which my father grins cockily, hands palmed into hip pockets, dressy new chaps sweeping back from his legs as if he were flying. On this one is written:

"My Cowboy."

My mother is frequent in the companion album, too, the one evidently begun by my father when he still lived off and on at the Doig homestead in the mountains above the Sixteen Canyon. Its pictorial record ranges from the Pacific Coast—Dad and Clifford Shearer, dubiously atop shoreline boulders the sopping winter they spent piling lumber in Aberdeen, Washington—to the Moss Agate ranch near Ringling where my father courted my mother. Small mysteries ask themselves whenever I go through these age-tanned shots. My father in cowboy hat and boots and with jeans rolled to four-inch cuffs sits on the front step of the log homestead house with his brother Claude and their riding buddy, Charlie Smith: what is the book Dad holds open in his hands, and why? Nine horsebackers are thundering pell-mell through the railroad village of Sixteen; one mount is being ridden double, a colt trails another, a fearless dog is racing amid the hooves, there is a boy in a flat cap running a crowding second to the lead rider, who seems to be wearing a white sailor cap. What event can this be?
Which rampager is my book-toting father of a few pages earlier?

Who of those homesteaders of the Sixteen country was skilled enough with a camera of the time to capture this cascade of motion without blur?

The large final album, my grandmother's, opens to a surprising sequence: my mother and father in pose after pose in front of tepee or tent. This time it is my father's words, spoken, which carry this part of their past into This House of Sky.* The first summer there on Grassy, we moved camp fifty-eight times in the first sixty days.*

We had a brand new box camera we were awful proud of, and we'd take a picture of our campsit[e every time.] Fifteen of those sheepcamp sites survive on the front and back of a single album page, one or the other of my parents in front of canvas walls while the other clicks the shutter, and elsewhere in my inherited collection is the tantalizing shot of this bunch: both of my parents together, there on Grass Mountain that first summer of their marriage—it cannot be half a century ago, yet it is—the best picture ever taken of the two of them. By whom? Their camp tender from the Dogie ranch? Johnny Gruar, the association rider on the mountain pasture adjoining theirs?
My grandmother, one of the times she rode the twenty miles from Moss Agate to visit?

The sum of the albums and their overflow is, by rapid count, five hundred about 300 photos. The pictures go back as far as they can: a baby portrait of my grandmother, born in 1893. Then one of her holding my mother at the age of perhaps six months, in 1913. In my father's earliest, he is in his late teens—1916, '17, '18?—standing atop the woodpile with four of his brothers and his sister, Doigs nearly as plentiful as the firewood under them. My own appearance into all this seems to reveal me from the very start as a straddler of generations—at age three in 1912, riding a tricycle in one shot and a horse in the next. As ravishing a cast of characters as we are, though, edges and backdrops are what capture my memory. Old truths stand stark in the lens light. That the rusty metal sheeting which covered the shed beside our house in Ringling made it the sorriest-looking structure in town, which was saying a lot. That Wall Mountain, its long cusp of stone on the horizon above the Doig homestead, still is as striking as any landform I have seen in the west of America. That around the log-and-chink homestead house amid sagebrush and shale, my Scottish grandparents put up a picket fence.

And as it is a fortunate sum, for when I set out to write This House
of Sky I found that photographs were the only consistent documentation
there was of us. I possessed a few hours each of tape-recorded talk with my father and grandmother, but as to linear evidence of the course of our three lives, we inadvertently had covered our tracks. When Grandma made a periodic attack on the muss of our household, letters were fed to the stove. Dad's dealings when he ran sheep on shares or contracted to put up hay usually were based on a handshake. I am
the family's sole diarist (it perhaps takes three generations to make one) and I began at it only ten years ago, my father already passed from us by then. So it was more vital than I knew, that evening a year or so before her own death in 1974, when my grandmother and I put the labels on her photographic preserves. From This House of Sky: "Picture upon picture of my father and mother...brought sniffles or hard-swallowed sentences from Grandma, and by the time I had jotted my notes on the final page, the emotion she had been putting into the room had worn me out. That should be enough for tonight, I said in a weary glaze. She turned to me in surprise: But we got these others to get through. Hadn't we just as well keep on? And we did."

The camera continues to tell me much of what I need to know to write. When Carol and I were married in 1965, with her came the dowry of her elderly Argus Camera. It had wandered Europe with her—undoubtedly sharpening the respect with which Grandma and Dad and I peered into its lens as Christmases were clicked into commemoration—and suddenly our pictured selves were bright with color. The Argus studied my home areas of Montana for me for This House of Sky; the Olympic Peninsula of Washington for Winter Brothers; and for The Sea, southeast Alaska and the Queen Charlotte Islands, where it caught a fatal dose of rain. Currently Carol wields a Pentax, as full of exposure lights as a traffic signal and with range-finding lines and arcs that would outfit a bombsight. The novel I am writing now needs a Montana town of the 1930's, and my wife and her pluperfect Pentax are its builders: houses from Fort Benton, Augusta's old square-front
SEPARATION NOTICE

The following items have been removed from Box 131, Folder 7, Collection 2602, for oversize storage elsewhere.

Items Removed:

Photograph: #4105 was removed from series 6- Correspondence, subseries 4- publishers and editors letters. Image was relocated to Series 8- photographs, subseries 3- photographic prints.

X Material has been placed in Box 1102, Folder 19, Collection 2602

___ Location information is available from the Special Collections Staff.