Weekend provides families a sample of campus life

By TYE LOMBARDI
Exponent Writer

College life. You finally get to go out on your own and feel what life is really like. No parents, no rules, no curfews, just you, your classes and your buddies. You discover all sorts of cool things you never knew existed before, like frat parties, alcohol, the opposite sex and of course, the joys of living in a dorm room.

Today MSU is opening its campus up for the eighth year of Parent/Family Weekend, and students begin to prepare for their visit. The weekend is aimed at bringing the families of students onto the campus to give them an insider's look. Festivities include introductory classes for using the internet, lectures from selected MSU professors, a homestyle dinner in the residence halls, two rafting trips and a football game, just to name a few.

Coordinated by Patricia Denison, the weekend is a fun way for parents to get a look around Bozeman.

"Family involvement is critical to Montana State University and we are delighted to have the opportunity to bring parents and others to campus for a weekend of activities designed just for them and their student," said Denison assistant director of University Relations. "I am looking forward to meeting families from various parts of the country. This weekend will provide them with an opportunity to get to know one another in an informal setting."

Virginia Nyquist has been involved in the program for three years. She first participated when her daughter invited her up and returned the next two years to not only participate but to help plan as well. One of the highlights of the weekend is a meeting with the Parent/Family Advisory Board and a panel with key MSU officials, something Nyquist looks forward to.

"It gives us a chance to get out and talk to students and really hear what they have to say about things on campus," Nyquist said. "We get kids' ideas and learn from them what needs to be done." So far, the Parent Family Advisory board has helped channel funds towards much needed band uniforms, computers for the library and improved lighting for the campus. All this has been made possible through input provided by the students and their parents at the forums.

Enrollment this year has been capped at over seven hundred with families from as far away as Hawaii and Alaska.

ASMSU keeps voter registration in check

MICHELLE TOKARSKI
Student Managing Editor

It didn't generate as much fanfare as the football season typically do, but it was at-Griz competition that may save Montana University students $14 million next year.

In an effort to get students involved in the voting process, ASMSU recently responded to the challenge of the University of Montana's political action committee by registering 970 students to vote compared to UM's 2000.

According to ASMSU President Matt McKamey, the drive was successful because it helped to make students more aware of ASMSU while at the same time giving students the chance to learn about some of the issues that affect them.

REGISTERED VOTERS
MSU-970
UM- 2,000

"We helped register quite a few people, and I think that there is that awareness now of the issues that will affect students now and in the future," McKamey said.

One such issue is the Six-Mill Levy, or Referendum 113, which could raise tuition at Montana universities. R-113 has been in place since 1948, and comes up for a vote every ten years.

Currently R-113 provides $14 million to the Montana University system. If it does not pass this year, student tuition will almost certainly go up next year. According to ASMSU Vice President Jeremy Fritz, the student vote is particularly crucial to passing R-113.

"Elections aren't all land-slides, and sometimes a few votes will change the course of history," Fritz said.

McKamey and Fritz both encourage all students to get out and vote on November 3.

Phoning in the money with campus phonathon

MARTHA MIDDLEBROOKS
Student News Editor

In an attempt to generate funds, the colleges, along with the libraries and Honors program on campus are participating in a Phonathon.

Although it is just one aspect of the annual fund raised each year, it generates the largest percentage of money within the account. Last year the annual fund raised over $1/2 a million and $325 thousand of that was generated by the Phonathon.

Each college or program has a scheduled time during which they utilize the phone bank. The college requests that students and clubs within the specific major work the phones and if more people are needed they request volunteers. Depending on the department, students are paid to make phone calls to alumni. The Phonathon also provides clubs within a department a way to raise money.

Over 500 students and 400 faculty members participate in the event.

"The Phonathon brings in the largest percentage of money raised for the annual fund and we like to give credit to the students for helping," said Jan Bosch director of the Annual Fund.

The fall session involves solicitation of alumni, and the spring generally involves the solicitation of parents. The students who make the calls are trained and are encouraged not to push the alumni into contributing.

According to Bosch, "Two alumni did not want to contribute on the phone and simply requested a form. They both returned the form with a donation of $10 thousand dollars."

Simple logic explains necessity of MSU's new sports facilities

I've never been accused of being a logical person. Everyone who has ever met me can attest to this fact. Frankly, the entire idea of syllogism, ordered sequence of thoughts, Aristotelian discourse and even the Scientific Method are about as interesting to me as a 42-reel documentary movie about the real-time making of coal. So, since logic is so alien to me, I have to say that it really isn't all that surprising that I don't understand most of the reasoning behind some of the construction decisions on campus.

There is one logical statement in particular that was quoted from one of our higher administrators on campus. I'm paraphrasing here because I'm the editorial columnist and accuracy would probably only spoil any jokes I try to make. (And if you're reading my column for fair and accurate news, I suggest you look elsewhere in this paper.) The quote was roughly this: "All the universities with great sports teams all have nice, big stadiums for their teams. Therefore, if we build a new, big, snazzy stadium, then we'll have a great sports team!" I know that this is a logical phrase because it contains the words "therefore" and "then." It forms a logical idea. It makes sense too. There is nothing faulty about that statement. However, I would like to propose this idea, because I think it's just as logical: "All the universities with great sports teams all have nice, big libraries. Therefore, if we build a big, new library with for interlibrary loan, our many athletes will get their papers done sooner and with less stress leaving them more time to practice! And the lower stress will help them concentrate more on the game! Second, all the student fans will get their homework done more quickly and easily, giving them more time to attend games and cheer on our teams.

Third, the better the library, the smarter all our students are. And, since we are an institution of higher learning, as opposed to athletics, surely we must embrace the philosophy that the smarter a student is the better a player he is. Fourth, with a new library, we won't lose our accreditation. That means that there will still be a university around to HAVE sports teams.

So, I think my idea is the more logical one. After all, we are a university, right? Therefore our hallmark should be LEARNING, yes? People tell me that I can get stuff through interlibrary loan. Well, yes, you can. Sometimes. And even if the book is available, you have to wait for it to arrive. If it does at all. I know three students who ordered books last year lots of books and scholarly journals, then we'll have a great sports team!" Isn't that logical?

After all, a stadium is just a place where the sports teams compete. It makes them feel good to play in a new, shiny stadium. It makes the fans feel good to see their team playing in nice surroundings. It seems that the entire advantage to a new football arena is increased morale for students and fans. Now, let's consider the many advantages to a sports team provided by a library whose collection and size adequately reflects the size of this great university. First, with more books, papers and journals available without having to wait the long time

Parent weekend causes chaos

The time is approaching. It feels like the end is near! Your heart is in your chest, your nerves mount to an unbelievably uncomfortable level, and you know that deep down surrender is inevitable!

No, it's not the end of the world. Neither does this have anything to do with Clinton's impeachment trial! It's worse, MUCH worse, it's Parents weekend!!! To most students this means: it's time to clean what is referred to as a bedroom (which is actually a breeding grounds for scientific experiments and a place to rest when a bed can be found under the pile of clothes), pretend that all areas of life are completely under control and that school is great, and make major adjustments in personal appearance to produce a well-groomed effect for the folks.

The issue of focus this week is directed to not only the students, but also the parents. In honor of parents/family weekend I hope to offer some wisdom that was passed along to me. Instead of dreading this weekend as a grueling and horrible experience, in hopes of being left with a shred of sanity, it's time to take control of the situation. This weekend provides the opportunity of reflection and redefinition of the known as the hierarchical parent/child relationship.

In light of my own personal experiences, I am familiar with this scenario. The benefits are great: a little ping, a free meal and some tra sports cash. However, it takes a lot of record keeping to feel secure where you go to life, work you want out of life, with your future goals, etc.? The traditional havoc that is caused can be traumatizing, even give new meaning to therapy! Personally, I think that there should be ex-tendants working the hotline this weekend!

The point that this columnist is attempting to prove is that all of this grief can be remedied with just a few modifications. Instead of consciously accepting the reality of the weekend, play it out as if it's time to alter the rules.

Logic: University's priorities should satisfy student not athletics

that never came. None of these help a student like me, who does his paper the weekend before it's due.

Besides, that isn't any way to run a school! In an effort to cut costs, we'll use books from another university! That's kind of like cutting down on car costs by not putting in any gas and hoping that you can borrow some from some other folks when your tank gets empty.

Books are the nuclei of the atom that is the university. To skimp on books will result in the breakdown of the entire structure. I like athletics and it can be an important part of overall campus life. But it isn't the center. And we're not paying enough attention to that center.

I don't have a specific thing you can do this week, but I've always felt that a letter or phone call to Mike Malone couldn't hurt. If we bug him enough, I think he'll crack. After all, we're paying to learn, not to sit in the stands.

Chaos: students should develop relationship with parents

haps, the parent/child relationship has been executed to the extremes, and a common level of understanding would be more beneficial. Possibly, one of the best advantages that students possess, but are unaware, is what is known as the home field advantage. In these rare and unique instances, opportunity sometimes has a mysterious way of presenting itself. If all the layers of the onion are peeled away, a cathartic experience happens - this is the realization that beyond all else - parents are actually humans, before they are parents. Just like us, they have no guidelines, no rulebook, no explanation of life, they're just people striving to maintain and accomplish their perspective of goals in their lives. Occasionally, it's pleasant to be able to have a conversation that is real, on the human level, all bullshit aside. Quite possibly, instead of just taking all that they are willing to give, there should be some giving in return. Some alternatives could be: buying lunch or sharing a favorite spot that is of personal significance.

Yeah, I know, it sounds REALLY cheesy and sappy. But what this columnist has come to discover is that getting to know parents on a human level actually dissolves a lot of tension that seems to be permanently present in the relationship and accomplishes a level of friendship that is difficult to achieve in most relationships. Moreover, this method appears to only be advantageous: it develops a heightened respect and appreciation, reduces the levels of anxiety and increases the amount of trust and responsibility.

So, all that aside - hopefully, this is the only light and fluffy column that will be produced by this author this year! I wish you all the best in your parent-befriending endeavors this weekend; and above all enjoying the small amount of time you have together, for it is easily taken for granted.

Phonathon: Raising funds with the phone

comply the following; develop a relationship with alumni, raise money for their department and update information on alumni. Although the ultimate goal of the Phonathon is to raise funds, it also is an opportunity for students to form a relationships with graduates.

"It's a good way to make connections," said Heather Padilla, graphic design student, "It's great to hear real life stories because things can seem surreal when you're in school."

The money raised by each department will be used for scholarships, student travel, equipment and faculty development. The department oversees the distribution of the money it raises.

"We believe that it (the Phonathon) offers students an opportunity to develop an appreciation for where the money comes from and how much their college needs it," said Tom Gelder, manager of the foundation.

The College of Business will be conducting its Phonathon next week, followed by Psychology and Engineering. The College of Business will not hire students but will pay calls within the college for the amount of money they raise. The College of Engineering will be paying. Students will be working the Phonathon.

"Last year we raised $55 thousand with the Phonathon," said Kathleen Langenheim, director of development for the college business.

ASMSU plans to revamp One Card system

THOMAS ANDERSON
Exponent Writer

Students with one card frustrations are soon to see the light at the end of the tunnel; ASMSU is in the works of expanding One Card usage to better accommodate the needs of students.

The One Card system has been expanding in use since its installation. On campus residents are confronted with the frustration of not being able to deposit money into their One Card account after hours. The absence of a night teller creates a problem for students who run their account dry while operating both copy machines and laundry machines, both of which are entirely run by One Card credit.

"We are seeing a lot more use of the One Card,"

An MSU student deposits money into an account at the One Card offices located in the SUB. ASMSU is currently looking into adding ATM style teller machines on campus to better serve the students.

said Matt McKamey, ASMSU President. Not having a night teller is "a bit of an inconvenience," McKamey said. "People do laundry at night," ASMSU Vice President Jeremy Fritz said. "Right now if someone runs out of money, they get someone else's card."

Fritz and McKamey are looking into adding an ATM style deposit machine that will allow students to direct deposit money into their accounts when the One Card office, which is only open 8-5, is closed.

"We would like to set up a ATM system, MSU Northern already has a system, The One Card (office) is already looking at it," said Fritz. "Hopefully it will be a possibility down the road."

ATM machines are only the beginning of possible One Card expansion.

"We are going to start small and work big," said McKamey. "Possibly a movie theater, gas station, Kinkos—places that provide after hours services that MSU doesn't offer."

Debit card possibilities are the next goal, "Down the road One Card could expand into a credit card system throughout the community," said Fritz.

"First and foremost we are trying to get One Card ATMs," said McKamey.

"It is not too expensive (ATM machines) the convenience is the issue," said Fritz.

Where the money will come from to purchase the ATM machines, which run into the tens of thousands range, has not been established.

"I am trying to set up a meeting so we can say where we are going to go—off campus usage—whatever we can justify," said Al Knutson, One Card office coordinator.

Unfortunately for drinking age students, the One Card system is not planning to expand usage to local bars.

Grant enables libraries to digitize collections

By DRUSHA MAYHUE
Exponent Writer

Images of Montana's rich heritage of Native Americans of the Great Plains will soon be available via the World Wide Web.

The Institute of Museum and Library Sciences has awarded the MSU Libraries at Bozeman, Billings and Northern campuses, in collaboration with the Museum of the Rockies and Little Big Horn College, a grant to digitize images from their collections to create a searchable database available over the Internet.

According to Walt Fleming, MSU professor of Native American Studies, "Besides collections in the museum and libraries, there are many one of a kind items housed at tribal colleges, such as tribal papers, which will now become available via the Internet."

Collections from the Museum of the Rockies and MSU

Libraries include photographs, sketches and handwritten documents. Photographs that date from the turn of the century and represent some of the earliest years of reservation life will be included.

Many images are on glass lantern slides which are very fragile.

"Each one has to be handled individually. The difficult part will be determining which pictures should not be shown to the public. Some images depict sacred ceremonies that shouldn't be viewed by the general public," said Fleming.

According to Fleming, the $138,346 grant was awarded because of the impact on the tribal colleges rather than just to service MSU.

"This is a very prestigious grant," said Fleming.

Preservation, as well as accessibility, are important factors in the project. Digitized images will preserve the originals and location will no longer be an obstacle to accessibility. The digitized format can be manipulated and printed materials can be linked with the new shared accessibility.

The project will demonstrate that the technologies employed can be used at a wide range of institutions to scan and process the images, while maintaining a database at a central location providing staff for its continuous maintenance.

Bruce Morton, Dean of Libraries at MSU, credited Elaine Peterson, associate professor on the Library faculty with leading and coordinating a team effort in the writing of the grant. "This grant is perfectly consistent with MSU's commitment to Montana's native people and consistent with MSU Libraries' support of a mission of service to the state," said Morton. Also included in the collections to be digitized are sixty-six ledger drawings created by Crow and Gros Ventre Indians between 1879 and 1897 on the Crow Indian Reservation.

Other drawings give a fascinating perspective on the transition of the Crow and Gros Ventre Indians from military dominance on the plains of Montana to settling on the Crow Reservation. Representations include Plains Indian warfare, hunting scenes, social dancing, Indian-White relations and council.

The project will be a model of cooperation between the museum, the MSU Libraries and Little Big Horn College, as well as tribal colleges around the state. Smaller universities and colleges do not have the resources available that a museum or large university may have.

A separate phase of the project will revolve around the annual Professional Development Institute for Tribal College Librarians in 1999. The workshops will be conducted for all tribal college participants so that the model can be further evaluated and be more widely disseminated and implemented.

Fleming will participate as part of the advisory committee overseeing the project. The advisory committee includes archivists, librarians, Native American Studies professors and computer experts.

"This grant is perfectly consistent with MSU's commitment to Montana's native people and consistent with MSU Libraries' support of a mission of service to the state."

'Women of Pompeii' depicts feminine issues through art

AMANDA RIDER
Exponent Writer

A few years ago Ellen Ornitz visited the ancient city of Pompeii and returned with a remarkable approach to art and women through art. From now until Oct. 30, Ornitz's traveling exhibition "Women of Pompeii" will be at the Exit Gallery in the SUB. The erupted in 78 AD, it encased the city of Pompeii in molten lava and ash. Men, women and children were literally captured in the moment of death.

The "Women of Pompeii" will be shown in the Exit Gallery until Oct. 30. The event is sponsored by the ASMSU Exit Gallery and the Montana Art Gallery Directors Association.

When Ornitz visited the city she was struck by the manner in which the bodies were preserved. There were men lying with their arms reaching to the heavens and small children that had fallen to the ground. What Ornitz found most compelling was the images of the women of Pompeii.

Upon returning to the U.S., Ornitz had her husband make a plaster mold of her torso and began experimenting with it. Gradually she began to use friends as models, trying to capture all different types of women. As a result, Ornitz created the "women of Pompeii." Some of the pieces reflect the stories of the models and some reflect Ornitz's friends.

Ornitz's intention with the "Women of Pompeii" is to present the whole story of womankind. Not only do the pieces reflect stories of women, but they reflect the artist's views of feminism and women in society. Ornitz's exhibition will be travelling throughout colleges in Montana, sponsored by the Montana Art Gallery Directors Association.

Studying abroad

Combine travel with learning experiences

BY MINDY HARCHENKO
Exponent writer

How many times have you dreamed of traveling abroad? Meeting new people, seeing new exotic places, traveling to far off lands. But right now you have to focus on college. Well, what if I told you it doesn't just have to be a dream anymore? You can actually go to that far off land and still do your studies.

ISEP is the International Student Exchange. It is an organization of more than 225 higher education institutions around the world that are committed to international exchange. ISEP exchanges are totally affordable too. It includes enrollment for full time study or research and housing and meals throughout the duration of the exchange. The program's fee is based upon Montana

State University tuition and fees as well as room and board. All you have to do is pay directly to MSU. Financial aid applies also. To be eligible, you must be enrolled in Montana State and have good academic standing. You must have completed at least one academic year of study at MSU, and have a minimum GPA of 2.75. If you decide to go to a non-English speaking school, you must be fluent in the language.

Now you know what it takes, so where do you want to go? There are more than 100 study sites worldwide, including non-traditional sites in Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, Latin America and the South Pacific. How does taking a long walk in the beautiful forests of the Middle Atlas Mountains, which are known for their awesome lakes and waterfalls, in Morocco sound? Or taking in an opera in the Netherlands? Watching the sunset on the sandy beaches of Sweden? Visiting the Eiffel Tower in France? Taking a bushwalk and exploring wildlife in Australia? Sound good?

ISEP exchanges can be arranged for a semester or a year. It just depends on your choice of study and the universities regulations. A semester isn't very long, considering the adjustment of going to a new culture. A full year exchange is strongly recommended.

Now, to add one more bonus, you will also receive Montana State University credit for all courses passed at the foreign university.

So, what are you waiting for? All information can be found at 400 Culbertson Hall. The people there are super friendly and informative. So, run on over and get signed up to capture your dream.

Vigil to condemn hate crime

BY MARCUS HIBDON
Exponent Editor

The death of University of Wyoming student Matthew Shepard has called to arms the students supporting diversity at Montana State.

Shepard, a gay student, was allegedly lured out of a Wyoming bar by two fellow students posing as homosexuals. Shepard was then severely beaten by the two men and tied to a fence post outside of Laramie. Shepard was found half a day later near death and immediately hospitalized. He died in intensive care Monday.

In response to the act of violence, a peace vigil will be held at 5 p.m. Monday, Oct. 19 in front of Montana Hall to silently protest Shepard's death and the intolerance it represented. Green ribbons will be made available at the Ask-Us desk on Tuesday as a reminder to students, faculty and staff that violent hate crimes will not be tolerated by the campus community.

"We will respect and uphold diversity and the issues associated with diversity within our student body," Dean of Students Denny Klewin said. "This vigil is simply a more formal statement that there are many on this campus who see this as a very violent and grievous act and a very sad event. We don't want this to happen here or anywhere again."

Students are encouraged to take part in enhancing diversity and resisting hate crimes. According to Klewin, awareness is key to fighting the intolerance so prevalent throughout society.

"This kind of hate mongering and criminality is taking place in a variety of campuses around the nation virtually weekly and we just don't hear about it," Klewin said.

Montana goes Hollywood in 'Clay Pigeons'

BY CHRIS ABEL
Exponent film reviewer

For as Hollywood-chic as Montana has become, "Clay Pigeons" paints a rather poor picture of life in the "last great place." And why not? Aside from indoor plumbing and automobiles, we are just the same as everyone else. Hollywood has cowboys; we have cowboys. Hollywood has unfaithful spouses; we have unfaithful spouses. Hollywood has serial killers; we have serial killers.

Set in a small, unnamed Montana town, "Clay Pigeons" cuts right to the chase — the first causality occurs no more than five minutes after the opening credits. While spending an afternoon drinking beer and shooting at the empty bottles, the movie's central character, Clay (Phoenix), finds himself in a sticky situation. His best friend and drinking/shooting buddy has learned that Clay is sleeping with his wife (but only on Wednesdays). Naturally, he isn't very happy about it. His interesting, if not half-baked, means of revenge is not to shoot Clay but commit suicide, making it look as though Clay had murdered him.

From there, our "hero" makes some very poor decisions.

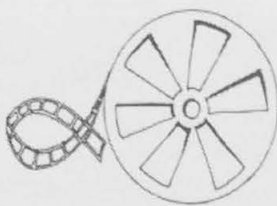

He tells the wife, Amanda, what has happened. She tells him that it's his problem, and besides, it isn't Wednesday. Rather than tell the authorities

There truly is very little more of the story that I can tell you without ruining its rather clever construction. I can tell you that the body count increases, and though we know that Clay is innocent (at least of the murders), the Sheriff and the FBI become more and more convinced of his guilt. I can also tell you a little about Lester Long (Vaughn). Lester is new in town, and since Clay's old drinking buddy killed himself, the two become fast friends. But Lester is what we in Montana call "not right in head."

While "Clay Pigeons" has a good story, I wonder if writer and director didn't try to make it just a little too complicated. The main plot is lost in a few too many details concerning periphery elements, though we really don't care about. In all honesty, this movie has been about a very game of pinocle, and it would have been fun. Now, because of tight dialog, flashy costuming, or exotic settings and locations, but because of characters. This picture has some of the most entertaining characters I have seen in months, perhaps all year.

what has happened — you know, the truth — he pushes his friend's truck off a cliff. Clay concocts a more or less crummy story, yet he gets away with it, escaping suspicion.

Procrastinator slates adventure, horror, comedy for the weekend

TROY HOLLAND
Special to the Exponent

Uhhh... duh, friends and neighbors. It's Friday! Are you ready for the weekend? From a few stories I've heard it sounds like some people are still recovering from Oktoberfest last weekend.

Well, you only live once; how long is always an interesting variable. Anyway, I have the perfect way to kick start your weekend. Come to the Procrastinator!!! This weekend you can witness a superhero save New Jersey, see romance on the big screen and watch Truman "unaware, on the air." In fact, if you're up for a sensory overload, you could do it all in one night!

"The Toxic Avenger" enjoyed six months of screen time in New York. When it opened, it received "radiant" reviews. Steven Holden of the NY Times said of the film, "...maniacally farcical sense of humor...". The film is set in Tromaville, New Jersey—a small town which is being terrorized by crime while the corrupt Mayor looks the other way. Melvin, one of the town's residents, is a skinny, nerdy janitor at the local health club where he is taunted, teased and humiliated by the "beautiful people" who are members of the club. Melvin has an "unfortunate" accident during one of these pranks and becomes... THE TOXIC AVENGER! He's now determined to singlehandedly save the town of Tromaville. This independent film is a one-of-a-kind, action packed adventure loaded with horror, science fiction and big-budget special effects. This week it's our special midnight show. Playing at..... uh, midnight on Friday and Saturday.

Warming up the big screen for Melvin are George Clooney and Jennifer Lopez starring in "Out of Sight." This film is based on the Elmore Leonard novel and is a sly and sexy crime caper. Clooney plays Jack Foley, an escaped bank robber who has no intention of returning to the pen and Lopez brings to life Karen Sisco, the Federal Marshal bent on recapturing him. The film is directed by Steven Soderbergh and produced by Danny DeVito and the Jersey Films partnership.

With such credits as Sex, Lies, and Videotape, Get Shorty, Pulp Fiction, Men In Black, and King of the Hill under their belt, this film is one to see. It is filled with off-beat characters, snappy dialogue, menacing situations, unpredictable plot twists and by the end of it even Sisco isn't sure if she'd rather bag him or bed him. "Out of Sight" shows Friday night at 7 p.m., Saturday at 9 p.m. and Sunday at 7 p.m.

Jim Carey joins the foray as Truman Burbank in "The Truman Show." This "show" is set in the beautiful town of Sea Haven where Truman was adopted at birth by the OmniCam Corporation to become the star of the most popular television show of all time. There are just a couple of small details they forgot to tell Truman. Like the fact that he's been on the air, live, since the moment of his birth 29 years ago. Join us at the Procrastinator Friday at 9:15 p.m., Saturday at 7 p.m., and/or Sunday at 5 p.m. and 9:15 p.m., for this hilarious film which is a rather interesting look more at [us], than at Truman.

MSU looking for payback against Portland State

OSTELLO
Sports Editor

trip to the past. The last time the Montana State Bobcats were ranked in the national power poll, they were ranked 25th in the country. They remained ranked for one week. Their first game after being selected as the best team in the country, the 'Cats went on to take on the Portland State Vikings. They came home humiliated after being defeated 44-0.

The 'Cats never recovered from the loss and finished the season 6-5.

Now, 50 weeks and six days later, MSU is ranked in the national poll (this time) and Portland State is coming to town.

This is the best football team I've had since Bobcat head coach Cliff Hysell. "National rankings are something we talk about in this is the best football team Hysell has ever coached, the 'Cats will have to come out and win on Saturday. After what happened in last year, MSU has a bone to pick with the Vikings.

Portland State has absolutely no respect for the Bobcats, Hysell said. "On Saturday, we have 60 minutes to earn it back."

To earn that respect back, MSU will have to do something they have yet to do on the season: play well on all sides of the ball. Both offense and defense will be tested in a big way on Saturday.

Like some sort of recurring dream, for the third game in a row, the Bobcat defense will face a dominating running back. Portland State's 5-foot, 8-inch, 187-pound sophomore Charles Dunn has put up outstanding numbers already this season.

Dunn has already rushed for more than 100 yards three times this season, including his 247 yards on 31 carries against Sacramento

State last week.

"He (Dunn) is a back that is capable of picking up 200 yards on four carries," Hysell said. "He is a big-play back."

Unlike the game against Weber state last week, this week the 'Cats will be facing an excellent passing attack to compliment their running game. Sophomore quarterback Jimmy Bobcat wide receiver, Chip Hobbs, runs through a tackle in a game earlier this season.

The Montana State University men's and women's cross country teams will compete at the University of Michigan Invitational Cross Country, Sunday, Oct. 18, in Ann Arbor.

The women's 5,000-meter race will begin at 10:30 a.m. followed by the men's 10,000-meter event at 11:15 a.m. The invitational will be held at the University of Michigan Golf Course, which is considered to be one of the most challenging cross country venues in the country. Last year, both the Bobcat men's and women's teams competed in the meet with the MSU women placing tenth out of 14 teams, and the men finishing seventh out of ten squads.

For the second consecutive meet, the Bobcats will find themselves competing along with some of the best programs in the nation. The women's field will include #2 Michigan, #7 Wake Forest, #8 Georgetown, #14 Washington, #23 Florida, and #24 Bowling Green. Other teams running in the women's race include Bucknell, James Madison, Notre Dame, Penn State, Rice and Youngstown State. The men's event will feature #7 Michigan, #15 Notre Dame, #23 Washington, #29 James Madison, along with Bucknell and Florida, both of which received votes in last week's top 30 poll. Also competing with MSU will be Wake Forest and Youngstown State.

The Bobcats last competition was the Mountain West Classic in Missoula, Sept. 26. The men's team finished eighth out of 19 teams. The 'Cats were paced by Kevin Jacobsen who finished 18th in a time of 25:23.70. He was followed by Mike Feist, 34th, 25:46.40 and Ski DeTray, 41st, 25:59.30. The Bobcat women's team placed eighth out of 15 squads. MSU was guided by Christine Werther who finished 21st in a time of 22:23.00. She was followed by Emily Thompson, 35th, 22:55.70 and Danielle Loomis, 44th, 23:13.00.

ullman, Wash. - Montana State University senior Natalie Bakke advanced to the championship match in No. 3 at the Cougar Tennis Classic, hosted by Washington State University last week.

Bakke, a native of Washington, posted an on-court upset victory over Natalie Barnby of Washington State, 6-4, 2-6, 7-6. She defeated Molly Sanders of Montana in the semifinals, 6-4, 6-0. Bakke lost in the title match to Andre Reisz of Washington State, 6-4, 6-1.

"Ingrid had a big weekend for us," said MSU women's coach Heidi Tate. "She has steadily been improving her game and we'll look for big things from her this season."

The Bobcats also had three athletes claim consolation titles last weekend. Mariska Steenkamp won the No. 1 singles consolation match for MSU with a 6-0, 6-0 win over

Rachel Gillis of Gonzaga, while Alissa Velts won at No. 2 singles with a 6-0, 6-1 victory over Heather Lane of MSU-Billings, and Heidi Dayhuff, a Bozeman native, won at No. 6 singles, posting a 6-3, 5-7, 6-3 win over Susan Terry of Gonzaga.

In addition, senior Sharon Cleland placed third at No. 4 singles with a 6-2, 6-4 win over Heather Hannon of Montana, and Elizabeth Lowrance also finished third with a 3-6, 6-4, 6-1 victory over Gloriana Serrano of Idaho.

"It's been nice to see the progress we've been making over the past couple of tournaments," Tate said. "We've had a good fall and we have high expectations for the Big Sky Conference season."

In doubles action, MSU's No. 3 team of Dayhuff and Lowrance finished second, losing in the finals 8-3 to Washington State. At No. 1 doubles, the Bobcat's tandem of Steenkamp and Cleland won the consolation bracket with a 8-4 win over Idaho.

MSU will compete next at the University of Colorado Invite, Oct. 23-26, in Boulder.

Battle of the zoos; World Series starts Saturday

BY LARRY STONE
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

NEW YORK - Here comes Kevin Brown and his band of renown. Here comes Dave Stewart and his death stare. Here comes Tony Gwynn and his batting titles. Here comes Bruce Bochy and his massive cranium.

The World Series matchup was set on Wednesday when the Braves got their alfreds Hitchcocked, and if anyone claims to have picked this one back in April, well, I half-believe them.

So it's San Diego, where the surf meets the turf, and New York, where the hype meets the gripe. Let's get ready to rumble, dude.

Ah, the characters we're going to see in the next week. There's crusty old Don Zimmer, who has a plate in his head, and crafty old Gwynn, who judging by his ever-increasing girth, has his head in a plate.

There's Stewart, who is proving to be more photogenic than Felicity, and David Wells, the Rebel With a Curve. There's The King, Jim Leyritz, who has just enough ego to think he's a star and just enough chutzpah to play like one in October.

There's Shane Spencer, who in one week has gone from the Phenom of the Century to the "Where-are-they-now?" files. There's Hideki Irabu, at least we think there is. If you spot him, contact Joe Torre immediately.

On the surface, it looks like one more joyride for the Yankees, who are at 121 wins and counting. They swatted aside the Rangers in the divisional series and then let Cleveland think it had a chance before disposing of them, too, in the American League Championship Series.

But the Padres aren't your typical underdogs. For one thing, they won 98 games and would have surpassed 100 if they hadn't stumbled in the final two weeks, long after they wrapped up the National League West title.

For another, this is a team that has thrived on flummoxing the lowered expectations of others.

The Dodgers were supposed to win the NL West, but the Padres took it by nine games. The Astros were supposed to win the divisional series, but the Padres beat Randy Johnson twice and took it in four. The Braves were supposed to win the NLCS, but they beat Tom Glavine twice and took it in six.

True, they don't have quite the historical resume of the Yankees. By the time the Padres were born in 1969, the Yankees had already won 30 pennants. In the ensuing 29 years, the Padres have made it to the World Series just once, in 1984, when they had the misfortune of playing a Detroit team that was nearly as dominant as this Yankee club. The as classy and accessible a superstar as exists in any sport. But it has become increasingly apparent that through age, injury or body inflation, Gwynn just isn't what he used to be. The sharp singles to right are becoming harmless ground-outs, the opposite-field knocks more often grounders to shortstop.

But for one week, Gwynn is fully capable of summoning up the past and hitting with his former authority. It would be nice to see one of the game's good guys step up.

The Yankees have the emotional backdrop of Darryl Strawberry's cancer battle to give them motivation, but the Padres have some extracurricular spurs of their own. By all accounts, they are literally playing for the survival of the franchise in San Diego. Many analysts believe that their stadium measure on the November ballot won't pass unless they win the World Series. And the Yankees thought Steinbrenner applied pressure to win.

It would be wise not to grow too attached to this Padre team, even if they stay in San Diego. It has more the feel of the '93 Phillies, a patched-together group of veterans making a last stand, than it of a rising power that will be here for years to come.

Gwynn and Wells are on their last legs, while Caminiti's beat-up leg is stuck in a permanent limbo. All three are gamblers of order, and if Greg Vaughn is healthy and Leyritz is conscious against his team, the Padres have to slay another giant.

The crux of their course, rests on Kevin Brown, who may try to become a pitcher since Mickey Vernon '68 to win three games in the World Series, and Dwight Gooden, where leads a One stud starter and a matic closer in a short make up for a multitude of deficiencies - and ex-MY common moniker in the Sterling Hitchcock had rather studly himself.

The Well Is V matchup for Saturday at Yankee Stadium (as) is again somewhere down is one of the most common many a year, two pit attitude who are at the of their games.

It will be a zoo at the Bronx Zoo. But the Bronx Zoo is be wary of the San Diego Tigers won in five.

Take away that year, and the biggest stories to come out of this franchise are Goose Gossage telling owner Ray Kroc that his hamburgers were poisoning the world, Steve Garvey fathering illegitimate children, and Roseanne singing the National Anthem off-key. It's not quite Lou Gehrig considering himself the luckiest man on the face of the earth.

OK, they do have Gwynn, a future Hall of Famer who has won eight batting titles and is Blanchard has passed for more than 200 yards in all five games this season and has found a favorite target in Arthur Williams, who has 11 touchdowns already this year.

"They have an outstanding offense, the biggest offensive line we play against, an outstanding running back, outstanding receivers and an outstanding quarterback," Hysell said. "We have to stop the run and put pressure on the quarterback."

The defense will be tested enough this week, more so with the loss of senior linebacker Ken Amato, who went down last week with a sprained knee and is not expected to return for at least two weeks.

"We need to have both the offense and defense show up for the same game," Hysell said. "We haven't done that yet this year."

The football game this weekend marks the middle of the season for the Bobcats who will have only two more home games in the regular season, on Saturday. The game against Montana State will highlight the events of Parent/Family Night. Kick-off is set for 12:05 p.m. Saturday at Bobcat Stadium.

The NBA finally became just like every other sports league. It first.
Fans second.

Bounce these b-ballers to the front of the line. After all, these guys aren't battling over any welfare issues like, say, free agency.

It was understandable to some degree that baseball and football shut down. Players in those sports wanted some freedom to work for whom they wanted, just like most of the rest of us. They didn't want to be treated like indentured employees, even though they were being paid like CEOs. The owners wanted to maintain their advantage. It was easy to root for the players in those squabbles.

Basketball players aren't going to war over freedom, though. They've got that. Had it for years. Free agency is what has helped them earn the other worldly salaries that they do, like the six-year, $126 million salary that Kevin Garnett, who went straight from high school to the pros, got from Minnesota last year as a 20-year-old.

The owners didn't lock out the players because they can't afford to pay them. There are players who've been charged with carrying firearms, but not even Latrell Sprewell put one to an owner's head to demand his $32 million salary. He didn't have to.
His boss simply gave it to him before some other owner offered even more.

What these basketcases are fighting over is, plain and simple, money.

This isn't about a rookie pay scale or a veteran minimum wage or whether marijuana, if you can believe it, should be a forbidden drug. It's about dollar bills. Loads of them. Like the $1.7 BILLION the league earned last season. The players took home the first part of that number, $1 billion. The owners walked off with the rest, $700 million.

The owners just want a greater share. The players don't want to rebate a penny.

It isn't so hard to figure out who will win this cage match, however, especially if arbitrator John Feerick rules that nothing is guaranteed about guaranteed contracts during a lockout. He is scheduled to rule by next Monday.
If he voids guaranteed contracts during this dispute, put your mortgage on the short guys in suits.

And, when they're done, they can let me know, just not while I'm watching some spirited college game.
