MSU administration urges students to go BAA

BRIAR BUILDER

EXCREMENT WRITER

In light of recent expansionist efforts to the physical structure of Montana State University, administration has decided to cut all majors except the Bachelor of Science in Animal Science, which it deems necessary to the continuation of the University's mission. All other students will receive a BAA or Bachelor of Artful Architecture Degree and will be responsible in whole or in part for an aspect of a new building in the university's master plan.

"I am delighted to unveil our plan for the future of MSU. We believe the creation of the BAA degree is a step in the right direction for the university," University President George Garage said in a press conference yesterday. "This program will provide the much-needed hands-on experience we seem to have been lacking at Montana State."

Students who one concentrated on architecture and environmental design will naturally take part in the design process of the buildings. Construction engineering focused individuals will naturally take part in overseeing construction. Students with previous artistic experience will be responsible for designing the interior of the buildings. At the press conference, questions were raised as to the fate of those whose current focus does not fit into the BAA curriculum.

"Humanities majors have little practical function in today's society," Provost Dale Door said. "Any who wish to stay at Montana State will have to conform."

MSU administration is planning a multi-million dollar expansion of the Wool Lab to house the new department. Other departmental offices will be closed and turned into student space.

"We feel that the students here should be given the majority of space on campus, as we have no reason to be here without them. I am delighted that we are going to attempt to downsize the administrative functions as we streamline university processes," Garage said.

With the completion of the plethora of new buildings on campus, the administration does not foresee a return to the old system.

"The university owns hundreds of undeveloped acreage on the south side of Bozeman," Garage said. "We will not stop building until all space has been utilized to its fullest extent. Even then we would have to start a replacement and maintenance project on the older structures."

During the unveiling ceremony, one faculty member noted the complete lack of student representation.

"We informed the students of this plan last summer with open discussion sessions held in the student union. What else can we do to invite student input?" Vice President Colin Roof said in response. "If they were truly interested, students would have made it a point to attend."

One student seems to stand in support of BAA. ASMSU President Blake Bo Peep is using his office to propagate the new major.

"As the leader of the students I feel it is my duty to back the administration as they promote the new BAA curriculum," Bo Peep said. "Who else can stand the shepherd of the flock?"

Bo Peep is determined to raise student support for the idea.

"The hands-on aspect of BAA will help MSU students secure employment as they leave the fold," Bo Peep said.

Little is yet known of what exactly the curriculum will encompass and how classes will be structured. The university hopes that the students follow their plan without further discussion.

"Students need to realize that while they may have vested interest into the current university, they have little foresight to predict the future needs of our institution," Garage said. "Students should go along with our plan without question."

Serial killing becomes new rage across MSU campus

KRISTY CRANE

EXCREMENT WRITER

In the grips of angst and anguish in American society today, young adults have found an easy, and moderately inexpensive way to release their inner tension and sexual frustrations. By killing those people that piss them off, or at the very least, killing the people that look like or act like the people that piss them off. "Serial killing has been around for centuries," said Dr. Julia Holdenblankcheck, a psychiatrist in the Montana State Prison psychiatric ward. "These days, since not everyone can afford to visit a psychologist or a gym to vent their frustrations, more and more young people are taking to killing off the cause of their frustrations."

Yes, the practice is illegal, but participants say it is filled with so many untold benefits. Lifting of weapons and bodies is healthy for upper body strength.

"My biceps have doubled in size since I started my killing spree," said one student known as the Bunny Banzai. Among his peers, Banzai is known for his quick speed.

"Last year, I was a skinny little guy. I could barely lift my backpack. Now... well, let's just say the last body I buried, weight almost as much as me."

As a skinny band geek, Banzai used to get picked on by football players when he was in high school. Now he kills football players on a regular basis. "I work out extensively," says Banzai. "I have to, if I want the proper strength to carry those heavy bodies to my secret dump site... I've never been more attractive to women before, either. Women love the muscles."

Aside from an improved muscle tone, there are benefits of an improved cardiovascular system.

"Some people you want to kill are good runners," said Howell the Howler. Howler used to be 75 pounds overweight, and on the verge of heart failure and at high risk for diabetes. "I was desperate to lose weight and get healthy. I'd tried everything, every diet you can think of. Weight Watchers, South Beach, Atkins. The Hollywood diet put me in the hospital for a week-end. I've found that serial killing... killing joggers, not only helped me to lose the weight and get healthy, but I've also been slowly and systematically ridding the world of those God-awful, scrawny, little joggers that you always see in skimpy clothes." At this point in his interview, Howler began mumbling and rocking in his chair.

Another benefit of serial killing is the inexpensive cost, which can range from the cost of a shovel, to the cost of a shovel and an axe or hunter's knife.

"Life in most cities is just too expensive," says a female serial killer known only as 'Sally.' "It just got to the point where I couldn't find a man to pay for a date. Money in this country still makes more money than women. Then men turn around and ask women to go out with them, but they expect you to pay for yourself? Oh, no. So if they don't pay, I hack their ding-a-ling and beat them with it until I get tired. Then I bury them with my hunting knife outside of town."

When asked where Sally buried her victims, she only replied, "If I told you...well, you know how the cliché works."

When probed further about the monetary cost of killing, Sally said that she bought her knife on eBay for a dollar, plus five dollars for shipping. "And I bought a shovel at S-Mart a few years ago for $19.95... It's been a good shovel too. I think I've buried at least twenty guys with that bad boy."

Until recently, local serial killers have had no place to organize or socialize with other serial killers. That is why Bunny Banzai started SKATE (Serial Killers Against The Establishment). Twice a month, serial killers meet in a safe, anonymous environment and discuss their latest killings, or share body disposal tips to "newbies," or simply bring cake and coffee. Says Banzai, "We're trying to let other serial killers out there know that they're not alone in their struggles."

MSU is considering building a crypt to house the bodies.

Honors Quads setting for creation of master race

ELENA EIFFEL
EXCREMENT WRITER

A master race is being bred in the Northeast corner of the campus. The Atkinson quadrangle, commonly known as the Quads, is home to over 100 honors students. An investigation conducted by the Honors Department staff revealed that the Honors Department is using the Quads as a fornication site in an attempt to create a supremely intelligent generation of honors offspring. They are also in the process of constructing a building that will be situated in the center of the courtyard. The building's sole function will be to provide a place for mating practices to take place.

Some honors students say they are somewhat disconcerted by the idea that their professors view them as sperm and egg donors.

My honors Texts & Critics professors were always trying to hook us up on dates with other students," honors student Smithers said. "In fact, now I think about it, my T & C professor was the one who introduced me to my boyfriend."

Smithers boyfriend, James

Blake, lived across the Quads courtyard from Smithers in Quad A. Blake said his professor encouraged him to ask Smithers out over a year ago, and the two have been dating since then.

"It's a little creepy now that I think about it," Blake said. "In fact, I wasn't even the least bit attracted to Ann when I first met her and her buck teeth. My prof convinced me that she was really rich and talented though, so I asked her out. He was actually wrong about her being talented and rich, though I guess I wouldn't really know because we never talk. We mainly just knit genes if you know what I mean," he added with a wink.

The investigation into the Quads uncovered even more efforts made by staff to get students to procreate. Not only did they promote fornication, but they subtly discouraged contraceptives and even sabotaged the efforts of students to have safe sex.

"One time there was a basket full of free condoms sitting in the dining room of my quad," Blake said. "I took a handful of them out of it to use later. When I unwrapped one, it had like ten holes poked into it."

In the file cabinets of the Honors Department office, a "family tree" of honors graduates was found under the label "Our plan to take over the world". It showed the number of students who ended up having children together, and had the outline of each child's life since birth. A gold star was placed on the files containing offspring, who had already showed signs of success in their young lives.

Some example of these success stories included a two-year-old who could read and deconstruct Milton's Paradise Lost and a twelve-year-old who had developed a new theory of social economics and is now up for a Nobel Prize.

"Who would have thought we could design brains like that just by putting a few students in close quarters with one another?" janitor of the Honors Department, Nanny Kole said. "I mean, we're really helping out humanity here, aren't we?"

Faced with the evidence of a plan to create a master race, Honors Department Director Mark Milas claimed he knew nothing and that the new building going up in the courtyard was not being built with funds from the Honors Department.

"Honestly, we are just here to promote philosophical and critical thinking," Milas said. "We do not waste our time with ridiculous plans such as those for a master race. We are completely removed from the planning of the fornication building. The professors of the Honors Department are only interested in giving their students something good to put on their résumés."

MSU promised to hire an auditor to look into the possibility that Honors Departments funds are being spent on the creation of an above-average intelligence race. A poll taken of university students showed that 92 percent of students believe the auditor will be paid vast sums of money, then tell the university that he is unable to reach a conclusion.

Honors Department off-spring succeed in world of business, arts, humanities, and everything else

The Atkinson Quadrangle is adding a new addition soon: a fornication building for honors students to procreate.

Former honors students Jenny Breeden and Jimmy Mate had their illegitimate child, Bob Breeden-Mate. Bob, now fourteen, recently composed a piano concerto, La Valse D'Elmo, which met with rave reviews in London and Chicago. Parisians did not appreciate the title and few attended the concerto's opening.

The love child of former Quads residents Maureen Ore and MaximusLut learned twelve languages by his tenth birthday. At the age of sixteen, he is currently interning at the United Nations and helped write the latest peace agreement between Canada and Switzerland, ending their ten year war.

Letters to the Editor are stupid

Dear Editor,

Letters to the Editor are really lame. Why don't you find something better to run? Freedom of speech should never be combined with the rights of the press. I want to see more personality quizzes and advice on which clothes will make me look cool. How about a few pictures of Orlando Bloom or Dan Rather? Rowr.

Nicky Teller

Gibson needs straight jacket

Dear Editor,

Shayna Gibson personally offends me. She obviously thinks she is funny, but she isn't! Disabled people falling down stairs and lighting on fire are funnier than Shayna Gibson. Reading Shayna Gibson's so-called "humor" is like blacking out after belly-flopping off a diving board and surfacing under a fat kid in a raft. She is as tedious as she is cliché. And newflash: Redheads are scary! Not sexy! Scary!

You're not attractive! You're a cock-teasing, know-it-all failure with no sense of reality. It's time to get over yourself and realize that you can't write columns centering on opinions about relationships when you've only dated actors and writers. They don't actually count. Dating an MTA major is like masturbating to internet porn, cheap, unfulfilling, and most of all, there is no way you have learned anything about real people and real emotions from these farces of love. You are probably a big dykie lesbian, anyhow.

Ms. Gibson is a stone's throw away from needing to be institutionalized for insanity. Subjecting the public to her maniacal, half-baked rants is both stupid and cruel. Get her some medication, get her an actual date, get her a freakin' reality check, and after intense therapy maybe then she'll be fit to do her job.

Pay her in dryer lint and see if she can tell the difference. What does a managing editor even do? That doesn't sound like a necessary position. She is obviously just riding the coat tails of the editor-in-chief and trying to scam ASMSU out of a bunch of cash. I've seen her at the supermarket buying cartloads of sea cucumbers. Without coupons. What is she doing with all of the sea cucumbers? Where is she even finding them? They shouldn't stock sea cucumbers in Montana? It's just wrong.

Sincerely,

Damien Stincel

Where is Waldo? Where?

Dear Editor,

I've been looking for Waldo in every issue this semester and I haven't seen hide nor hair of him. Until recently, I've always been an avid reader of your little paper because I could always find Waldo. Your new photo editor should have her eyes gouged out and her uterus punched in for her terrible usage of pictures. Bring back Waldo! Where is he? I miss him. I miss his little glasses, and the stripes of his sweater. Oh, how I would caress those stripes. I would be so gentle, Waldo. Please come back, baby, I didn't mean it. I love your little hat. That silly woman can't keep you away from me.

And you can't Photo-wench! YOU WILL FAIL. Waldo and I have a bond that cannot be broken by your poor time-management skills.

Sincerely,

Larry Pollup

LETTERS TO THE EXCREMENT

The Excrement accepts letters to the editor, guest editorials, and day old herring. Submissions must be exactly 437 words, or a factor of 9 to the fifth power. Content can cover any subject as long as it can be placed into the sentence, "Your mom likes to _____ all night long."

Profanity is highly encouraged, though it is not necessary to actually read an article before responding to it or its author. Submissions can be made telepathically by writing them in your underwear and standing under the full moon with an overripe avocado.

Baldy McBaldbold

Dear Editor,

Kyle Stack must be a lesbian. I don't doubt that he likes females, but I think he is one due to his girlishly unrealistic expectations for teams such as the Lakers and 49ers. His faux baldness is just a ruse to divert attention from his luscious mane. However, Josh Hemsath is by far the most talented and attractive person on the Excrement staff and I want to have his babies. Josh is stunning. Each exquisite word that flows from his keyboard makes me go weak in the knees. I worship you Josh. You have a dazzling gift.

Sincerely,

Kyle's Mom

What-in-chief??

Dear Editor,

I would like so very much to petition your readers to remove Editor-in-Chief Rachel Hergett from her position. As has been pointed out in many recent student administrative meetings, she poses only a figurehead for the Excrement. She is no better than our own president, G.W. Everyone knows that it is either the significant other or the significant other in command that gets anything done. As far as I know, Rachel is not having a Hillary. But she may very well be a closet lesbian. Because her entirely undemanding job, I keep seeing Rachel with press people at sporting and entertainment events where she is treated as a goddess and elevated far above the general student population. At one event she was in a curtained coach festooned with gilded gold and on the shoulders of four striking males. Her highness was being fawned with palm leaves and fed luscious grapes. Should she really get perks above the generous compensation given her by the students?

Is this really the best way to spend student money? Letting Rachel lord her status over students must stop. I urge all students to end this inherent bureaucratic bull-crap.

Outraged,

Candy Fuccer

Mormons suck

Dear Editor,

How could the Excrement editor-in-chief actually hire someone as ignorant as Erica Aytes for the position of news editor? She is obviously a conservative Mormon who should just go back to Idaho to grow some potatoes, then punch out a dozen or so kids. While cooking for her husband a meal of meat and more meat. Barefoot. This is worthless she is to the paper. Almost as worthless as her pending marriage that is really just to hide the fact that she is a lesbian.

To begin with, Ms. Aytes knows nothing of world politics. She seems to have an overly apathetic attitude towards the world in general. Her understanding of current events begins and ends with Britney's pregnancy.

Her convoluted view of the world has even pushed her to believe that the problem of rapes on campus can be stopped by putting more phones around campus. C'mon Aytes, admit that you want blue light phones because you are currently without a cell phone and want to use them to call your friends. A little integrity in the newsroom, please!

Beyond her utter lack of respect for current news, she has absolutely no talent for design. This year's news pages are full of vertical columns, which cause readers to feel nauseous. And how many times are we going to have to endure another front page with two juxtaposed pictures? For the love of God, woman, think of something else to do. We beg of you.

If Erica Aytes is not fired soon, I will stop reading the paper. Only about 200 students read the paper anyways, Rachel Fuccer should take notice.

Yours,

Monkye Munki

The Feminists were wrong and they are very sorry on campus organization unites the sexes and puts myths of female equality to rest

LUCY LACUNAR

EXCREMENT WRITER

"We were so very, very wrong and we're sorry," said Gina Vagler Tuesday's press conference. "Feminism was just a huge mistake. I think it came from women not having appropriate hobbies to keep themselves occupied."

The new on-campus society had formed seemingly overnight. Women Against False Feminist Lies, Etcetera (WAFFLE) meets once a week in Ballroom A, if it's okay with their husbands.

"Of course it has been a life-changing experience to join WAFFLE and see how wrong I've been," says member Lana Lidol. "But it's not like I'm going to drop out of school or stop going to classes. I'm not sure yet."

The group meets for at least an hour, unless dinner needs to be on the table earlier than that allows. Their full schedule consists of swap recipes, discussing romance novel cover art, debating appropriate lengths, and sharing back issues of Cosmopolitan.

"I didn't realize that as a feminist I was just looking for some kind of acceptance," said founder Vagler. "Imagine my surprise when it turned out that all I really needed to do to be accepted was shave my armpits, wear some eyeliner and find myself a frat boy. Freedom of thought is usually completely overrated."

However, it has not been all flowers and aprons for the newly formed coalition. "We had one poser," confessed Vagler while needing to leave in her self-sponsored cooking class. "The program had a few people to begin with, but they are all worked out. Of course there is no way that our enlightening film strip had any correlation to that poor nervous breakdown."

Tracy Grey was taken into state custody after being found running through the quads in nothing but a green hat. She was reported wearing a pair of electric clippers.

"She was really strong willed," said Grey's roommate, Molly Spender. "I was so stubbornly convinced that women were superior to men that rather than go on dates she used to sit on the internet and read Harry Potter fan fiction. Apparently it's really good."

It was Spender who called for help when finding a nude Grey attempting to tie herself to a flag pole while shaving her eyebrows off.

When asked her why she was shaving off her eyebrows and she said that men were becoming slaves to plucking and waxing. She had this magic marker and apparently she was going to draw new eyebrows on, like Whoopie Goldberg or something. It was really scary."

Upon visiting Grey at Shandler's Home for the Mentally Instable it became instantly clear that the girl had indeed succeeded in removing her eyebrows. She was covered in magic marker drawings of stick figures urinating on breakfast foods. Though present, she was not available for comment.

"The only thing different with her is that she didn't want to listen to the film's soundtrack," said WAFFLE initiator Ann Lomick. "I don't know if she was an MTA major, or just dating one, but she was really into all of the educational video's cinematic merits. She was listening to a iPod full of Dresden Dolls songs. Personally, I would never listen to anything like that - it's weird. Obviously, she was really in need of a football player, or frat brother to smack her around when she was thinking about things that are too big for a woman's brain."

Despite this embarrassment, we are moving forward with as much confidence as can be expected from a bunch of girls just playing pretend," concluded Vagler.

WAFFLE was scheduled to receive a new building near the stadium parking lot, but they declined. "We'd much rather just come clean your living," they told campus officials.

Ladies, do not fear the stress of making your own way in life. Independence, feminism, and individuality have met their match in WAFFLE, the Women Against False Feminist Lies, Etc. The group meets when it is convenient for the husbands to swap recipes and relationship advice.

Local super hero reveals secret identity for the first time

KRISTY CRANE

EXCREMENT WRITER

People of all ages and creeds live in and around Bozeman, Montana. Why? Safety, seclusion, social status. Despite the amount of lower income families and poor college students that live here, there is a lot of money in Bozeman. There are rich, crazy penny pinchers that have six-plus figures in their second savings account, but they will still argue the validation of an expired coupon in order to save fifty cents on a can of peas.

Because there is all this money floating around Bozeman, crime could be a lot higher than it really is. But why isn't it? Why isn't there a higher rate of break-ins and burglaries? One reason.

Her name is Jenna Snyder. Her daytime profession: bounty hunter for Cherry Bail Bonds in downtown Bozeman. Her night job: superhero, Cosmia.

"When I was a little kid, my mom used to call me Cosmia because I could jump 'as high as the cosmos.'" Chuckled the freckle-faced blonde. Aside from high jumping capabilities, Cosmia also has the super physical strength of ten healthy men, and she can run as fast as 35 miles an hour for up to two hours at a time. "There's a few other things I can do, but I can't give away all my secret identity... I still have to be able to surprise villains when they strike."

Three years ago, the now 24-year-old became Montana's youngest female bounty hunter at the tender age of 21 when she accidentally apprehended a purse snatcher.

"It was the funniest thing, really," Cosmia said. "I was just coming out of Cactus Records

Jenna Snyder, looks like any other civilian upon first glance. Locals know her as a bookish bounty hunter. Her alter ego has been revealed exclusively to the Excrement and by night, Snyder mystically transforms into super hero Cosmia, so nicknamed by her mother for her ability to jump really, really high. Ecologically minded, she saves money by knitting her own costume.

when I heard this yelling up the street. This guy had grabbed this woman's purse and was running off with it. Well, I took off sprinting. He was a fast runner, so I just somersaulted over his head and tripped him." The purse-snatcher turned out to be wanted for several felonies; the rewards for the capture totaled into the thousands.

"The rush was amazing," Cosmia said. "I decided then and there, that I wanted to catch bad guys. I checked out the police academy, but the cops are restrained too much by laws, and on what they can do. Many criminals get away because of these little loop holes. I decided to fill in those loop holes." She consulted Cherry Bail Bonds to apply to be one of their fugitive apprehension agents.

"I laughed," said James Cherry, owner of Cherry Bail Bonds. "When I first saw this stocky, wimpy-looking, librarian-looking girl walk in. I thought she wanted to bail someone out of jail." On the contrary, she was applying for a job. "I must have stared at her for about five minutes before I realize that she was serious."

In the back room of Cherry Bail Bonds, there is a small training gym where Cherry's bounty hunter get in their daily workouts, or check the wanted posters.

Cherry told Cosmia that he couldn't hire her until he saw what kind of apprehension skills she had. "I was nervous about that," said Cosmia. "I knew what I could do, and I was really worried about hurting someone... Even when I saw that the two bounty hunters that were in the gym that I had to apprehend -- they could've competed with The Rock." She chuckles a little at the memory. "Yeah, I held back quite a bit, but... Jim [Cherry] hired me."

"A lot of people, wonder why I look so much like a librarian," says Cosmia, addressing S-Mart clothes. "Well, for thing, a lot of people I'm after a bounty hunter don't realize I am until I'm too close for them to get away."

As Bozeman's one and only superhero, and with the quickly growing into the metropolis that it is, S-Mart will also keep their oversized knit sweaters in stock, and the citizens sleep comfortably knowing Cosmia is out there somewhere. Keeping us safe from human villains and super villains alike.

Snyder is personally contributing to the security necessary to keep MSU building sites safe.

"A lot of people wonder why I look so much like a librarian."

Running Diary: One man's drunken journey on 'Cat-Griz day

SUNNY SKYRISE
EXCREMENT WRITER

With all of the press attention always devoted each year to the annual on-field Cats/Griz football action, I thought it was about time for someone to cover the action off the field – the tailgates. As it turns out, that someone was me. But with everything going on around the stadium, I knew I needed help. So, I commissioned some correspondents to help me detail all the details – my illegitimate Irish brothers, Alasdair Duff and James Night, and my man in the field, Scott Eeks. Here's what transpired...

5:56 a.m. – Violent, sudden snacks on my door. "Kenny Vogg, get your ass up!" Doug Anders, the mustachioed coach of Team Gender, Johnstone Hall's informal drinking team, is standing in my door with two Pabst Blue Ribbon beers in his hands, and I know one of those rotten things for me. I committed myself to a crack-of-dawn drinking bout the night before, and now it's the time to start, for good or ill. 6:00 a.m. is an ungodly time to start drinking, I think to myself, but the sooner I get going, the better. I crack open my beer.

6:30 a.m. – Well, my first beer's gone, and so is my second one. Alasdair's up and drinking. It's time to get James, who, rumor has it, grew dangerously, slobbering-umbly-can't-stand-straight-backed-out drunk last night and had to be helped home and put to bed by a soul more gentle and benevolent than his own. Coaxing him out with us might take some work. Astonishingly, he booms out of bed without issue and stands in his doorway swaying back and forth like Bob Huggins, still twisted from the night before. Jesus, he's been drinking in his sleep," Alasdair points out. And now he's drinking while awake, after I slip him a Miller Hi-Life. James unleashes a series of deafening obscenities down the hall, just for the hell of it. Alasdair and I laugh and trade "We're definitely getting arrested today" looks. Good times, good times...

7:17 a.m. – We shotgun our first beers in Doug's room.

8:30 a.m. – Breakfast. I get my food first, so I pour cups of coffee for everyone and tell Alasdair to sit in front of me so the food service workers can't see my whiskey. I dump a little in all the cups and slide them down the table, setting everyone up like Steve Nash. Two poor girls who don't know any better sit at the opposite end of our depraved, drunken mob. Alasdair yells "hello" to them, but they don't respond. Sensing their apprehension, we behave appreciably worse. Doug makes loud mule noises, James shouts instead of speaks, and we all drop f-bombs like they're going out of style.

8:30 a.m. – 11:20 a.m. – Steady drinking. Even in the shower.

11:40 a.m. – We enter the tailgate section – me with my garbage bag of beers propped on my shoulder – and I almost immediately fall on my ass in front of about 200 people. The result? Awkwardness. Embarrassment. Spilled beer. And fantastic comedy for everyone else. "Hey man, that was a 10!" someone yells, giving me the thumbs-up. Somewhere between collecting myself and my bag of beer off the ice, I realize I had been drinking steadily for nearly six hours already. Good God. I also realize I was headed for another blacked-out afternoon if I wasn't careful, not to mention a roaring case of delirium tremens for the morning.

11:57 a.m. – I shotgun another one with the boys, and with Mike "Big Hummer" Turner as well, who suffers an apparent Unidentified Drinking Injury (UDI) in the act, cutting his lip wide open on a beer can and not noticing it for at least 20 minutes. "Ummmm, I think you cut it when you were shotgunning, man," I offer. "That's awesome. Let's do another," he says.

12:00 p.m. – We do another one, partly in deference to the Big Hummer and partly in deference to the impending kickoff. There is a game going on, after all. To be entirely honest, though, I'm only mildly interested in it at this point, especially with the beer really gripping hold of me now. Mostly, I want to wander around and keep drinking, although I do want the 'Cats to win.

12:02 p.m. – Shotgun number nine, Alasdair informs us. Damn, I need to take it easy for awhile. I'm asking for trouble. James and I have the following exchange:

Him: F, are you all right, man?

Me: (really struggling) Fvydlffjf gikgkjg ahfijlal ajlff.

Him: Damn, man...

12:17 p.m. – Hello, Erin Murray...

12:22 p.m. – We talk to Marshall Aker, an MSU student taking in his first 'Cat/Griz game. Since we started drinking at six, I wondered when he started. "I quit drinking at five last night and started again at nine this morning," he told me. Impressive. "I just wanna get drunk," he said, although he seemed fairly interested in the game, too. 'Cats win this one," he thought, "by a touchdown, 36-29."

12:30 p.m. – James and I continue making our rounds, bumming beers along the way. James, in ostensibly better shape than I am, helps me ask questions since I seem to be failing to communicate on an even rudimentary level. We stop to talk to MSU student Kelsey Curt, who's here for "the drinking and potato chips" and thinks the 'Cats will win by three. I tell her I'm just here for the drinking.

12:35 p.m. – We run into MSU student Tony Knuckles, who's been drinking since 8:30 in the morning. "I want to have a good time and get annihilated," he says. He's shooting for being "the drunkest man in Bozeman" today, which is no small feat, especially today. Some of the BAC levels here are higher than Ichiro's batting average. I think I'm on the cusp of the Mendoza line.

12:58 p.m. – Wild snowball fight right now. My gaze catches a frenzied UM student – short, weird, and wound up. He takes off his jacket, swings his arm around, and starts blowing on his hands and gesturing and pointing like Peyton Manning – he's gearing up to throw, and a considerable crowd is watching him in anticipation. After all his preparations, he botches the throw so badly a group of about ten girls begins audibly and obviously laughing at him. Ouch. Peyton Manning? More like Tommy Maddox...

1:05 p.m. – I receive first word from my field correspondent, Scott. We talk about the snowball fight. "Look at this. I wonder who the hell started it," I tell him. "I did," he says. "And I just juiced the bald cop in the head with a snowball and immediately pounded my

1:12 p.m. – The snowball fight is escalating and tensions are spilling over. A boiling, bubbling climax seems imminent. I wonder, meanwhile: Where the hell are the MSU police? Are they involved with it? Are they just standing around making targets for vicious drunkards like Scott Eeks? Do they just not care? Or are they simply incompetent? The mind boggles...

1:30 p.m. – The Irishmen and I decide to cut up more beer cans and drink their contents as fast as possible. Again. "Hold up a second," I tell them. "I see one of my professors." Sure enough, he sees me too, and he's coming towards us. It's Dr. Scotts, who wants to know why I've been derelict in showing up for History 325 the past two weeks. With no good excuse, I begin to feel the hot whips of guilt. Damn, what do I tell him? ... Because it would be painfully obvious I didn't do the readings? Because it's too cold outside? Because I'm a colossal asshole? ... I'm flummoxed. I don't know what to say. Thankfully, James comes to my rescue again and suggests we all shotgun a beer. "Yeah, what the hell," Scotts says. The four of us align ourselves into a circle, cut holes in our beers, and start to chug furiously. The professor, looking like he's done this sort of thing before, finishes first. He slams his can to the ground and staggers off, hissing something under his breath in German. (All right, I made that whole thing up. Don't fail me, Scotts. Bitte.)

1:40 p.m. – Most everybody seems uninterested in throwing snow. Maybe MSU's esteemed police force imposed order and cast a halt to it all. Or maybe not. I'm beginning to wonder if anyone out here really cares about the game. James and I decide to go and find out. But first, we shotgun another beer, this time with the aid of a key since we inexplicably lost the knife we used just ten minutes ago. After all the shotgunning I've done today, this is the first time I've spilled beer on myself. I feel like I just lost a no-hitter.

2:00 p.m. – The ice has devolved to a nasty mishmash of slush and mud. Everyone's pants are shot. And my socks are completely soaked through.

2:02 p.m. – Here's some-

Lucifer loves his hockey

FAULTY TOWERS
EXCREMENT WRITER

A recent study of Gallatin Valley hockey referees shows an increasing occurrence of Satanic slip and bloodlines amongst hockey referees. This appears to follow a national trend of similar results surrounding junior hockey officials.

In a recent piece entitled "Black Stripes, Hooven Skates: Lucifer and Junior Hockey in America," Montana State paranormal sociology professor Torino Bloomberg has brought to light intriguing statistics and facts surrounding the officiating of junior hockey in North America.

"It would appear that the North American Hockey Referee Development Syndicate (NHRDS) has been selecting potential referee candidates based on reptilian blood quantum levels," stated Bloomberg in a recent interview. Reptilian blood levels are the biological signals used by researchers to find Lucifer's descendants on Earth. Levels of reptilian blood are due to the ancient DNA intermingling with the human world with the demonic reptilian-like creatures that inhabit the underworld.

Gallatin Valley referees appear to be following the national trend of hockey officials with higher average reptilian blood quantum levels. "In recently recovered blood samples from the referee's changing facilities at the Valley Ice Center, we found high reptilian DNA levels," said Bloomberg.

"Members of the homo reptilian species do not consume food as [humans] do. They simply devour positive energy, and in response shed pieces of their internal organ system. Thus, the reptilian DNA is present in the blood of the referees," declared Bloomberg. The recent push to ban the demonic descendants of Lucifer in junior hockey is occurring due to the presence of large crowds that exert positive energy cheering their local teams on.

In his study, Professor Bloomberg highlights that as many as 48 percent of junior hockey referees in the Gallatin Valley are descendants of the Dark Prince himself. "It seems terrifying that Lucifer himself appears to be taking such a presence in the Valley," stated Bloomberg. These numbers appear to coincide with other statistics of the Pacific Northwest in which reptilian referees make up 48 percent of the population. What may be seen as malicious behavior of missed calls and unfavorable penalties actually stems from the physical disabilities of the reptilian species. "You see, the division of the reptilian species is climated to the dark, murky depths of the underworld," said Bloomberg. "The bright lights of the arena reflecting off the surface of the ice actually somewhat blinds them. This forces many referees to simply fabricate calls seemingly nothingness."

Bloomberg went on to state the following: "The surefootedness of the officials is often also an indication of their hooves that are obfuscated by their ice skates. Much like mountain goats, ice presents little in the way of obstacles to their movement."

There are many theories as to why Satan is using NAHRDS to place his minions amongst us, but none have been tested to be universally true. "Personally, I believe that hockey is next in line for Lucifer after he conquered basketball and football in the early 1990's. But that's just one man's opinion. Although that one man happens to be an incredibly educated and well studied man," stated Bloomberg.

What can be done to combat the disturbing growth of the fallen angel's descendents in junior hockey? "The answer is simple," said Bloomberg. "As these individuals survive off of positive energy, it is feasible that by throwing negative energy at them during the course of a game it's possible to force them out of junior hockey. Flinging insults and witty jabs at them throughout the game will starve them of the necessary food energy they require. The more people that turn against these referees, the better chance we have of defeating the Dark Prince and his attempt to steal junior hockey from us."

thing you don't see every day: a school bus with a portable, collapsible beer pong table in it. As the Guinness guys would say, "Brilliant!" I step inside and talk to Greg Zeeker, a freshman who plays for the MSU lacrosse team. He offers a succinct appraisal of the tailgating experience: "Beer. Alcohol. Food." And apparently beer pong in a school bus, thanks to Chris Carly and Blake Parcle of the lacrosse team. I love it.

2:15 p.m. - Just saw someone drinking Yellowtail Shiraz out of a Coors Light can. If he's on Facebook, I really hope that's

2:30 p.m. - It's clear MSU will win and I'm slipping from drunk to drunker. James is nowhere to be found, Scott is soaked from head-to-toe in beer and mud and is almost certainly blacked-out, and Alasdair is shamelessly calling every girl who walks by "Nurse" and instantly telling them he's from Ireland. Everyone is utterly ruined. And so am I. To hell with it, I'm done interviewing people. I'm drunk, tired, hungry and on my way downtown. In other words, I'm out like the Griz.

MONTANA STATE UNIVERSITY
POLICE REPORTS

For the week of Dec.
1- Dec. 7

Centennial Mall: Three students dressed in tank tops and miniskirts were found dead. Doctors determined the cause of death to be hypothermia due to the lack of coats and long pants they wore.

Quads: Four pairs of students were found fornicating in the courtyard.

Main Street: An estimated 60 Campus Crusaders for Christ flooded Main Street in an attempt to save the pagans of Bozeman.

Montana Hall: 32 dead bodies were found buried near Montana Hall. Police believe they may have been victims of the new serial killing fad.

Wilson Hall: Superhero Cosmia was warned for flying indoors and disrupting classes.

Townsend: An ASMSU Senator was pulled over on the shore of Canyon Ferry Lake in Townsend. He was looking for his friends who had had too much sex on the beach.

Family and Graduate Housing: Twelve women reportedly passed out from exhaustion in their homes. They blamed their lifestyle changes from feminist CEOs to housewives.

VCB: A male student was arrested for indecent exposure. He was wearing only a knitted g-string.

Three students freeze after SASSY riots

A new group on campus, called Students Against Slutty Snow Youth, SASSY, provoked a riot that turned into tragedy on the MSU campus on Monday, Dec. 5. After the riot, three freshmen students were found frozen to death.

The riot was centered around the building created for students on campus (the majority of whom are female freshmen or members of sororities) who cover less than half of their bodies during below freezing temperatures to give them a place to warm up between campus and avoid hypothermia. Though the building's official name is Chiver Hall, SASSY nicknamed it the Brrothel.

"Everyone knows that freshmen and sorority girls are sluts," Des Eret, a SASSY member said. "Let's just call this new building what it is."

Carrying banners that proclaimed "Go back to Cali, Slutty Snow Youth!" and "Your legs are turning blue and your fake tans can't hide them", protestors created a scene of high tension.

"We should not be promoting the dress choices of these irresponsible teenagers hoping to get some by wearing miniskirts and stilettos," MSU senior and riot participant Tilly Jence said. "The idea that taxpayers' dollars would support their stupidity is beyond my comprehension. Tear down the Brrothel!"

At approximately 2 p.m., the rioters met their opposition. Students clad in barely anything marched out of the building and began shouting at the banner carriers. Unfortunately, no one was able to understand them because their teeth were chattering too loudly.

"We fe-ee-lll l-ll-li-ke n-no one u-u-under-r-rst-st-st-ands u-s," shivered MSU freshman Precious Peterson. "We j-j-just w-want t-to ex-pr-press our-s-s-e-elves thr-rough our c-c-cloth-thing."

The conflict ensued for three hours until SASSY members finally pushed through the freezing crowd and into Chiver Hall. Immediately shedding layers of jackets and mittens due to the building's 95 degree temperatures, SASSY then proceeded to smash open windows and destroy the 50 baseboard heaters in the small building. All fires in the fireplaces were extinguished soon after.

Outside, sounds of wailing were heard as the other half of the crowd watched Chiver Hall rapidly losing its heat.

"This is what happens when silly people do silly things: they die. We hope this goes to show everyone that Montana is cold."

The police showed up to the scene ten minutes after SASSY entered the building. They offered down coats and wool scarves to the students outside, but most refused the gesture.

"If we put on warm, bulky clothes, that means they win!" shouted Peterson. "Resist, everyone, resist!"

A few students felt they could no longer resist and, shamefaced, they turned away from their comrades and took snow boots from the officers. Their actions were met with hisses from their more stoic friends.

"After all we've been through, this is how you repay me? You are nothing to me, nothing!" MSU freshman Justin Atee yelled to his girlfriend as she wrapped herself in a blanket. The supporters of Chiver Hall turned against one another, divided between those who were freezing and those who refused to believe they were capable of freezing.

Police carted 213 SASSY members from the building, but said they would not press charges.

"I can't really justify punishing people for having common sense. It just isn't logical," police chief Bobby Putser said.

As for the Slutty Snow Youth, they were left there, mourning the remains of their building. Police and SASSY quietly exited the scene, leaving everyone to fend for themselves.

The next morning, three Slutty Snow Youth were found dead, huddled in a heap of ashes. Their bodies were frozen solid. Another student, Jenna Smith, was pressed against the remains of Chiver Hall. She was taken to the hospital and is now in stable condition.

"This is quite a tragedy of course, but I suppose we could call it natural selection," Officer James of the MSU Police Department said. "I mean, really, what kind of genius spends the night out in the cold wearing only a tank top and capris?"

SASSY spokesperson, Kasense, said SASSY regrets death of the three students, hopes the incident will prove SASSY's point.

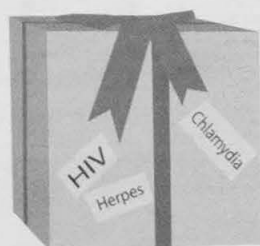

"This is what happens when silly people do silly things: they die. We hope this goes to show everyone that Montana is cold and bikinis are not safe piece of clothing in December."

MSU President George Garage said he is abandoning the idea of Chiver Hall. Instead, he will convert it to a center for the Save the Pagans club. The idea that, according to unsanctified research, absolutely none on campus supports. However, Garage said he thinks it's important to promote religion on public school grounds.

"The country's going to stop it," he said.

Memorial services for the dead, frozen students will be held on Friday, Dec. 16, from 12 p.m. to 3 p.m. in Centennial Mall. Attendees are advised to

MSU acknowledges gays and natives with new dual-community center, bar

In an effort to recognize the diverse campus make-up, MSU President George Gable was happy to announce on Wednesday that a gay bar and Native American Resource Center will be constructed at the base of the EPS foodle.

"MSU, long celebrated for its mountains and minds, can now be celebrated for fags and Reds," said Gable at the announcement. Students will be happy to know that not one cent of their tuition funds will go to build this monument to diversity."

The dramatic unveiling ceremony with lights and a Village People soundtrack dismissed the obvious fact that the new building will supplant the Wool Lab as the campus' smallest building.

"Size is of no importance. Gays and Native Americans have a deeply vested sense of pride. No matter how large or small, walls will not be able to contain their pride," stated Dean Inexpensive Rhino, the new director of the center/bar in regards to its diminutive size.

"I'm just excited that there will be a place aside from the Robin Hood us gays to congregate. That is the only 'gay' bar in Bozeman, Montana. It's nice that the school has stopped oppressing the fags, and embraced our culture," said a gay activist, Justin Jar-Opener.

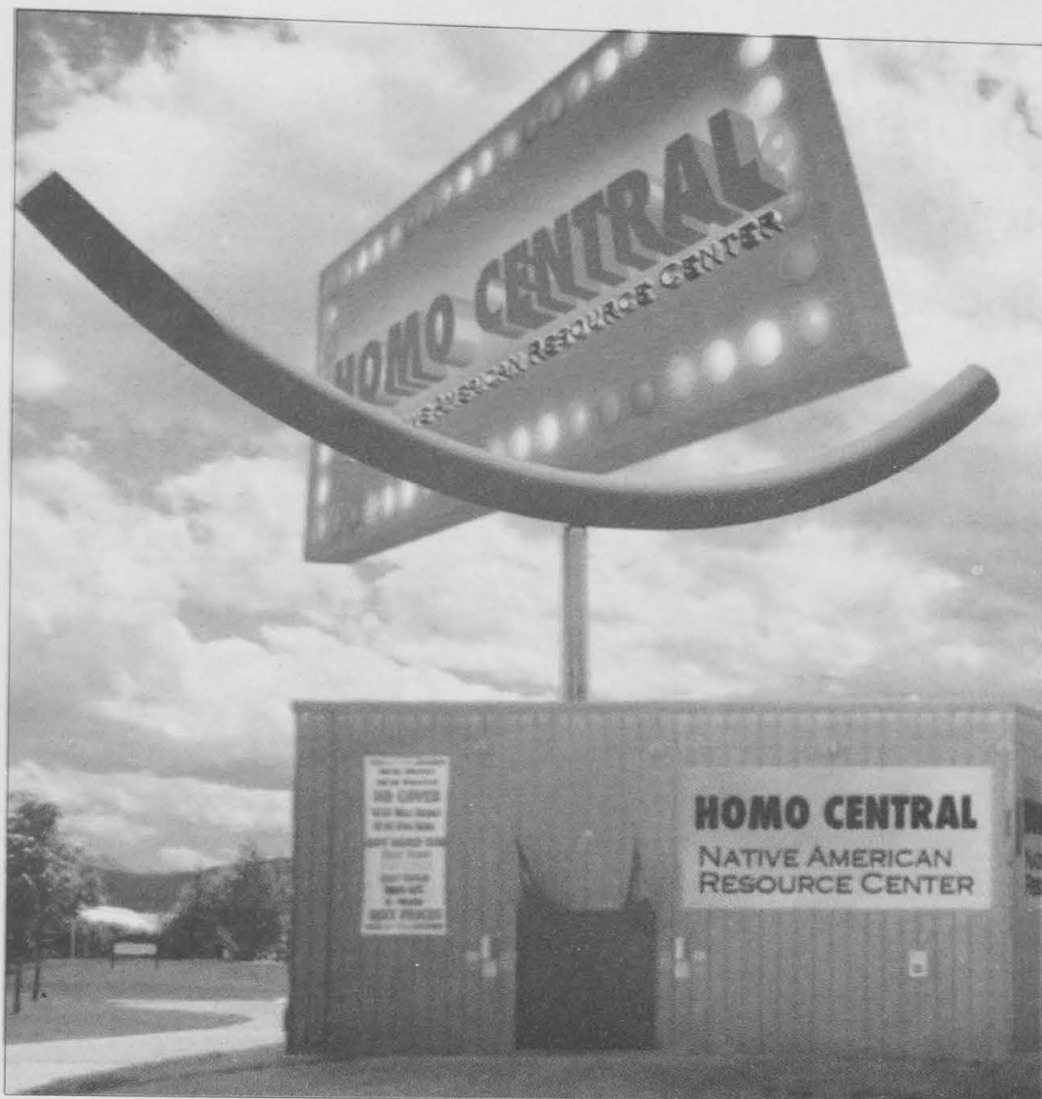

One of the features planned for the food and beverage operation is a double-minority happy hour discount.

"We feel this will provide incentive for the intended users to take advantage of this great new space. Also, the beverage discount will recognize the hundreds, if not thousands of years of oppression suffered by members of the class," declared Inexpensive Rhino.

While the bar will be more specifically catered to the gay demographic, it will also be open to members of the Native American community.

"This building does not embrace exclusivity," said President Gable. "It spoons with it."

The center will only open to recognized members of the two communities. Permissions will be granted to gays' and natives' ID Cards, allowing them access to the building.

This artist's rendering depicts MSU's plans community center. The university hopes to provide centralized resources for Native Americans, and a safe place for gays.

Native American status will be recorded upon applying to the school. For those identifying as gay after they apply, the registrar's office will accept late adds. Schedule conflicts may occur as a result, however, as weekly use is required for gays.

Being an institutional facility, the building will not only be used for social purposes. There will also be some new classes held in the building. One popular class being offered will help girls in the MTA department identify whether or not other potential mates are available.

The course, MTA 369, entitled "Gay or MTA?" will offer non-gays a chance in the facility, to learn how to tell if a guy on campus is an active homosexual or just a MTA major. This will be a 3-credit course offered as part of the Core 2.0 Diversity requirement.

In conjunction with the Human Development-Physical Education department, a Homosexual Studies minor will also be offered after completion of 21 credits of homosexual history, culture and lifestyle. Social dance classes, as well as physique improving PE classes will be mandatory for the 21-credit minor.

As a final capstone requirement, the candidate must be able to dance to Madonna with his/her hands above their head and then pick the tightest T-shirt from a rack at the Buckle.

ASMSU Senator Fred Flathead is not entirely convinced the money funding for the new building has come from non-tuition sources, as claimed by MSU administration.

This new shack-inspired building is a step in a direction that many hope will lead to future minority-friendly moves by MSU.

"Gays and Native Americans have had a long history of being treated like second-class citizens in this country, hopefully by combining forces in Montana, we can move from the cramped coach section into leather seats," stated Jar-Opener.

Artists receive new $40-million building for studios

Students in the College of Art and Architecture, long-frustrated by the apparent lack of quality university space for their programs, no longer have any cause for consternation. The university has recently approved the construction of a new, state-of-the-art building to house the college.

Currently, the College of Art and Architecture administers some of the most renowned majors such as Architecture, Media and Theater Arts, and Pre-Graphic Design.

The new facilities seem long overdue, especially considering that over 1,640 students are registered under majors in the College of Arts and Architecture. This is 12.84 times the amount of students enrolled in the chemistry program.

"I've spent my entire art history career in the same room," one student commented. "After a while you lose track of what class you are in—a Monet starts to look a lot like a Manet. It's very creepy."

Amongst the most relieved are architecture students, who look forward to spending time in a place other than Romney Gym where the program currently rents space.

These students often spend

NEW ART: MSU recognizes art and architecture students' demand for more space with new building proposal

Montana State administration, dealing with an increasingly tight budget, managed to propose a well-needed $40-million dollar building to house the College of Arts and Architecture instruction space. Despite concerns over quality drafting tables, the administration's plan is to continue with building the enormous structure.

their entire week in the basement of Romney, and according to Cody Corkscrew, a first-year student, the conditions are less than ideal. "You would think that with a program as renowned as MSU's, the university would be able to afford some decent drafting tables," he said.

Storage is also a problem in Romney as students are forced to store projects on top of lockers, where they are often damaged or stolen.

When he learned of students' distress, Dr. Darren Door, Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs, jumped into action.

"My highest priority is to serve as the chief academic officer for the entire institution," he said.

Further-more, Dr. Door's personal love of the arts helped impassion him towards the cause.

"I love movies, and cartoons, and the Beatles. I just can't imagine myself at an institution that did not support these sorts of things," said Door.

MSU is currently meeting with different firms to formulate a design for the building. With all the students enrolled in the college, constructing a building large enough to hold the program is going to be somewhat of a challenge.

"It has to be huge," said David Drillhead, who works as an equipment technician in the Art program.

The administration has set aside $40 million dollars for the design and construction of the building which will include new music practice rooms, studio space, and a student gallery.

"We're not exactly sure what is going on, and where the money is coming from. But we do know that not one cent will be paid for by students," noted President George Gable.

There has also been much debate over the name of the structure. Traditionally, buildings on campus have been named after faculty members in the corresponding field. To that end, the university has decided to name the building Hamburger Hall after Dr. Harry Hamburger, a professor of art history in the college.

Not everyone, however, is happy with the upcoming improvement on campus. ASMSU Senator Fred Flathead, who has spent the past year questioning university funding, believes that a new building does not necessarily solve anything.

"Since this is Montana, I'll call it an analogy," he explained. "Just because somebody gives you a horse, it does not mean anything. You still have to feed him, a ride him, and brush him, and build him a barn."

Or, in this case, a new building.

EXIT Gallery takes exhibition to a new level

JERRY JACKHAMMER
EXCREMENT WRITER

In pursuit of continuing their long-standing tradition of show-biz or controversial artwork, EXIT Gallery is announcing its new performance art exhibition. "This show really pushes the concept of what 'exhibitionism' is," said Gallery manager Linda Lightswitch.

The new show premieres the EXIT Gallery's new space. The EXIT Gallery is housed in a state-of-the-art exhibition hall on the site of the former pay parking lot.

"This space allows to show more student and traveling artwork at the same time than ever before, as well as a new theater space for performance art," stated Linda Lightswitch.

Performance art is a new medium for the EXIT Gallery to showcase, as it was formerly limited to hangable two-dimensional artwork, small sculptures and installations, and on a rare occasion art films.

The inaugural performance piece to the untrained eye may seem like a live pornographic show, but one would find at a club.

"It's really a statement on the sexualization of our society. A kind of like fighting fire with fire. This is the only way this message will reach Montanans," said performance artist Tina Toolbelt.

"The piece is a really effective way of introducing performance art to the explorers who want to find the extremes in art," said Linda Lightswitch.

Seats await EXIT Gallery patrons. The Gallery has allotted space in its new building for "alternative performance art."

"I don't actually pick the pieces, a more skilled jury who focuses on 'quality of work' rather than content selects the work that is shown," continued Linda Lightswitch.

Artists appear in the space fully clothed, and slowly remove their clothing. Music is utilized at this point. Eventually the artists commence sexual intercourse.

The show is only recommended for mature audiences of 18 and older.

"I'm so excited that the EXIT Gallery selected our piece to debut performance art on the MSU campus," said Toolbelt.
