The MSU Exponent is Montana State University's student-run newspaper, bringing together more than 70 students of diverse backgrounds and approaches in service of the public interest. We strive to contribute to the university's community by providing thorough, original reporting and creating space for public discussion about topics important to students. The paper is funded through an annual student fee and advertising revenue. It is published on Thursdays during the academic year and is available online at msuexponent.com.

Introductions are in order. You have just picked up, perhaps for the first time, a copy of the Montana State University Exponent. In doing so, you have participated in a legacy on this campus. Take a closer look at the cover, and you will see what I mean.

"Montana State's student newspaper since 1895." Now that is a claim to be proud of. Think about that date for a moment. In 1895, Montana was a young state of six years old. Bozeman had been incorporated only 12 years earlier, and was still a rough frontier town of about 2,600 people. The President of the United States was Grover Cleveland. Closer to home, a gentleman by the name of H.G. Phelps penned the first Exponent article ever printed, which you can enjoy on this same page. Montana State University was only 3 years old at the time.

To commemorate our history, this entire edition is comprised of articles pulled from our comprehensive and complete archive, stored in Special Collections at Renne Library. In the spirit of MSU's 125th anniversary, we will continue to showcase archived articles from throughout the years.

Speaking of the anniversary, this year is a historic one for our university. Now, MSU has reached the ripe old age of 125, and there is much to celebrate. To quote our current university president, Waded Cruzado, "Since 1893, the university has educated thousands of students and helped improve the lives of many generations of Montanans. This is a good story to tell and an enormous accomplishment that deserves a joyous celebration."

The story of MSU lies in you and me, and all the students and faculty who walk these grounds, research in our labs and learn in our classrooms in an effort to better themselves and the world around them through education. The Exponent has the honor of chronicling our MSU story. Our hope is to always connect students to the community through our efforts.

To our returning readers, thank you and welcome back. For our new readers, welcome to Montana State University. I hope you continue to pick up a copy of The Exponent many more times to come as we move into the next 125 years of MSU history.

MSU's 12th president, Waded Cruzado, inaugurated after eight months

BY AUTUMN LABUFF
PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 16, 2010

Dr. Waded Cruzado was officially inaugurated as Montana State University's 12th president after eight months on the job. Among the guests attending were Gov. Brian Schweitzer, three former MSU presidents, Bozeman Mayor Jeff Krauss and the former New Mexico Gov. Garrey Carruthers.

Cruzado entered the hall donned in academic regalia, the last of a long parade of academic deans, MSU board members and the Board of Regents of the Montana University System, all escorted by Commissioner of Higher Education Sheila Sterns.

After several speeches by the Honorable Governor Schweitzer, words by Jeff Krauss, mayor of Bozeman, and Eric Fisher ASMSU president among others, Cruzado received the University Bible, owned by the university's second president, James Reid. The Bible is presented to subsequent presidents, along with the Presidential Medallion, made of silver with inlaid ice-blue sapphires. Each president's name is engraved on the back of the pendent.

The American flag flown over the Capitol in Washington D.C on Sept. 10 was in honor of Cruzado. She will receive the flag as a gift at a later date.

PRESIDENT JAMES REID

BY H. G. PHELPS
PUBLISHED MAY 30, 1895

This being the first issue of our College Magazine, we thought it fitting to present to our readers a portrait of President James Reid. We teachers have been associated with him now for one year and may truly say that we have a man at the head of this institution who is thoroughly interested in our work as instructors and always ready to give us intelligent advice. We clip the following from an article by F. L. Kern in a recent issue of The Rockies, "Thoroughly honest and conscientious, large hearted and sympathetic, ambitious and progressive; these are the qualities backed by a broad and liberal education and fine culture, with unusual executive ability, that make President Reid at once a leader and model among school men. He is a native of Canada, of Scotch-Irish parentage, beginning his higher education at the Collegiate Institute of Hamilton, Ontario. He then attended the Toronto University, but graduated in 1881 with high honors from the famous McGill University of Montreal. He studied theology two years in the Union Theological Seminary, New York City, and also two years in the Presbyterian College of Montreal, graduating from the course in theology and the arts and sciences. He then spent one year in the Edinburgh University and Synod Hall, where he was called to Bay City, Michigan, where he spent several years in preaching and as principal of the High school of that city. Spending the winter of 1889 in New York in post graduate work, he came in the spring to Montana, taking charge of the College of Montana at Deer Lodge and also the Presbyterian church of that city. In the fall of 1891 he gave himself entirely to the work of the College which he presided over successfully for five years. He was president of the State Council of Education for three years; and in 1894 was president of the State Teachers' Association. He has been two years a member of the State Board of Education, and recognizing his executive and financial abilities in the management of the College at Deer Lodge, that body placed him in charge of the State College at Bozeman, an act highly approved by every citizen of Montana. "The young men and women who place themselves under the influence and training of President Reid, will not only receive thorough and practical instruction in their scholastic studies, but will get that higher and better preparation for life's work, the ethical psychical training that is so necessary to true manhood and womanhood."

Fear sets in Effects of terrorism hit home

BY PAT HILL

PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 14, 2001

The atmosphere was surreal on the MSU-Bozeman campus on Tuesday, after terrorists crashed hijacked airliners into the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

Posters advising students that "Classes have NOT been cancelled today (9/11/01)" were evident all over campus, but most classes were cut short anyway. MSU students faculty and staff gathered around televisions in nearly every university facility, watching the tragedy unfold.

"All across the nation, everyone is struggling with the same shock, sadness, and anger," said MSU president Geoffrey Gamble. "People are gathered around televisions everywhere."

The twin towers of the landmark World Trade Center no longer inhabit the New York City Skyline, which looked like a disaster movie set on live television. Both towers collapsed within hours of the mid-morning attack after they were struck by two commercial planes. Thousands of people, including rescue workers, are missing and feared dead. NYC mayor Rudolph Guiliani warned his city and the nation that the final death toll will be "horrific."

The nation's Capital itself was attacked shortly after NYC was hit, as a third hijacked airliner slammed into the Pentagon. A fourth hijacked commercial aircraft crashed short of its intended target, which authorities speculated was the presidential retreat at Camp David or the White House.

"I don't know what to say," said MSU freshman David Leslie, one of the students gathered around the big screen TV in the Union Market. "It's crazy that they can organize such an attack."

The mood was much the same everywhere on campus, as people gathered in groups discussing the unprecedented act of terrorism.

"Our military is on high-alert status," said President George Bush on Tuesday morning. "We will show the world that we will pass this test. Freedom itself was attacked this morning by a faceless coward... and freedom will be defended." Americans across the nation are sharing in this feeling of solidarity, and countries around the world are also denouncing the attack.

"Leaders have an obligation to provide that leadership at this time," said Gamble. "There can be no jumping to conclusions... we learned not to rush to judgement from Oklahoma City." Gamble said that he and ASMSU President Andy Parker met with university and community officials on Tuesday to discuss "providing good support" for MSU students, employees and the community as a whole.

"Everybody's shaken up right now," said Parker, "and like Dr. Gamble said, we're just trying to keep people calm right now. We want everyone safe... ultimately safe." Parker said that support efforts are "going on" presently, and campus events, including an evening prayer vigil for survivors and victims, are being planned.

"Call ASMSU or the Ask Us desk for information," said Parker. "The campus police are the best resource for information are this time, however."

An increased police presence at MSU was evident on Tuesday, but officers on the beat refused to speak about the matter. Law enforcement officers across the nation are on a heightened state of alert, and the AP reported that the alert status directive originated with the FBI.

"Our financial and military symbols of power were attacked, but the functions of our government continue," said Bush, addressing the nation on Tuesday evening, "and our financial institutions remain strong."

Bush also hinted at a change in foreign policy with his speech, according to some political analysts: "We will make no distinction between terrorists and those who harbor them."

"Hopefully, we won't use nukes," said history major Lisa Harris, who is also a 911 dispatcher for Sweetgrass county. "We shouldn't have to go that far." Harris said that she hopes "this will bring us all together as a nation."

"We're all affected by this... We all feel connected," said Harris, adding the feeling of "connection" is the only good result of Tuesday's terrorism.

"We need that back to be a good power," Harris said.

"There is a quiet, unyielding anger in the country," said Bush. "None of us will ever forget this day."

Forced dorm residence may end

PUBLISHED OCTOBER 29, 1969

"We recommend, beginning in 1970-71, that only freshman men and women be required to live in residence halls," said Acting President William Johnstone. "I have no reason to believe the board of regents will not approve this recommendation," continued Johnstone.

If this recommendation is approved, all freshmen under the age of 21 will be required to live in the dormitories except those living in the community or students commuting. In special cases, freshmen will be able to appeal living in the residence halls. Resident hall living will be voluntary for all other MSU students.

"This should result in better housing," said Johnstone. "Students will reside in the dormitories because they choose to. This should show a change in resident hall attitude and discipline."

"We must average $300 per student living in the residence halls for debt services to pay off the bonds," Johnstone explained. "We must meet our debt responsibility while offering off campus residence to sophomores, juniors, and seniors."

At the present time the university is leasing office space from the residence halls. This income is helping to pay off the bonds.

Some of the two-storied married student housing may be removed to provide additional parking space and playing area. "This will also cut down the fire danger," said Johnstone.

"The architect is completing the plans to build another 65 apartments for married students," Johnstone pointed out. "In July, 40 more requests had been received for the tower apartments than were available. Possibly the new married student apartments will be completed by next fall," he went on.

An architect is presently examining Pryor Hall which may be converted to efficiency apartments. However, no decision will be made on the conversion of Pryor this year. "Perhaps, we could provide another type of housing and rent the efficiency apartments to the single students," Johnstone concluded.

Tribute to John Kennedy

PUBLISHED DECEMBER 6, 1963

Two weeks ago today, this nation lost a great leader.

The flags still fly at half mast but most of the black draperies have been removed.

This is altogether fitting and proper. "The president is dead! long live the president." But the man, John Fitzgerald Kennedy can never be replaced.

Perhaps only now, after the business of the nation has begun anew, after the catastrophe has been replaced in its storeroom, after "Hail to the Chief" has been played for the last time, and after the saluting cannon have been silenced can we think of the man, not the president.

What kind of a man was this?

He was born into a wealthy and influential family. On his twenty-first birthday he was given one million dollars. He was handsome, charming, endowed with a brilliant mind and a determined spirit. This last trait separates him from all but a small handful of men.

At one time he exercised so that he could strengthen his back to the point that the Navy would accept him. He was not against using his father's name and influence to get him what he wanted. He did use them. To get him sent into a combat area during the war.

He did not want to be a political man. But his belief in tradition was larger than his personal desires. And once he was in the game he again used influence, money and fast talk to get him what he wanted.

There was no doubt in his mind as to whether or not this was right. He knew that he was the best man for the job so his path was well defined.

He brought youth and exuberance to the nation. He taught us that compromise is better than total disagreement. He showed us that culture had a place in government.

And now, he is gone.

The most fitting tribute paid him was the simplest. That of Richard M. Nixon:

"The final and greatest chapter of 'Profiles in Courage' has been written."

SPORTS

Cats join Big Sky

BY W. T. SHAW
PUBLISHED JUNE 7, 1963

After operating on an independent basis in intercollegiate sports since 1956, Montana State College once again was initiated into an NCAA recognized league, the Big Sky Conference.

Composed mainly of schools who were once members of some other conference, the new loop includes Idaho University, Idaho State University, Weber College of Ogden, Utah, Gonzaga University, Montana State University, and MSC.

The purpose of the Big Sky Conference is to coordinate the athletic and academic programs of institutions having the same relative size and educational goals.

Under this new set-up, the winner of the basketball competition will automatically be in the NCAA regional play-offs, with a chance to advance to the national finals.

Gonzaga, which gave up football a number of years ago, will not compete in that sport, but will take part in the remainder of the schedule.

There is no rule that all schools must participate in all of the sports offered, but it is expected that there will be very few exceptions at any of the member institutions.

Official conference competition will begin in the fall of 1963 with the football schedule.

MSC's entrance into the league is expected to give the school the publicity and opportunity to become one of the top athletic powers in the Northwest.

Athletics in eastern colleges

BY W. T. SHAW
PUBLISHED APRIL 1896

THE rush and rage of athletic sports are now the topics of all our college papers. A college's reputation seems to be dependent upon the success of its athletes. They are the object of thought, of study, of pursuit and of ambition. Their whole souls are cast with these pursuits. Their ideals and day dreams picture themselves through terrible efforts and training, reaching the goal just a trifle ahead of some noted athlete.

What shall we say of them and their ambitions? Whatever we say they will probably retort that we have soured because we can make no showing here in the West in these lines. That if we had a good team we would be as proud of it as any college is of theirs. In answer, let me say there is no reason for such a retort, as we can furnish as good athletes as any part of the world if we would take the matter up and train as do the students of the East.

No, the reason why we do not all grow up to athletics is that here you find the desire for wealth so much stronger than in the East. Here the people of all classes, of all dispositions, with but few exceptions, are not contented with what they have. There is a mad rush for money. The students get the fever early in life. All, young and old, are looking into the future for a fortune.

This motive, true, has caused a great deal of crime, and confirmed to a certain extent the old saying, "The love of money is the source of all evil." But, again, it is the direct cause of the resources of the West being so thoroughly developed. It is the cause of some of the greatest engineering feats the world has known. It has made the people prosperous, progressive, daring, and is bringing the West into the first ranks as regards learning and educational influence.

Did it ever occur to a college graduate, who finished with athletic honors, that the reason why he could find nothing to do when he entered practical life was that he could do nothing. He was not trained in the line of work where he would like to take the responsibility. Men who can do well always find something to do if they are capable.

Did it ever occur to an athlete who worshiped and looked with such reverence upon those people they are wont to call "massive brained" that they were ordinary beings who had acquired all by hard study, close application, self-denial and never tiring energy. There is too much stress nowadays laid on genius. One of the best arguments there is against colleges running to excess in athletic sports is that the great object in life should be to develop every faculty and fit one for the destiny for which he was brought into this world. If he fails in this he has failed in all. A college education should at least start one upon this road, and prepare him for study and development which will lead to this end.

Hence, if our colleges will all run to excess in one direction, we cannot expect to develop the harmonious citizens and practical educated men we would wish for.

Women's BB finished No. 4

BY CHRIS WALTERSKIRCHEN
PUBLISHED APRIL 2, 1976

The Bobcat women's basketball team travelled to Portland three weeks ago for the Northwest regionals tournament and a berth in the national championships. The Bobcats came away from regionals with a fourth place finish and a very successful season.

The first game MSU played in the tournament was against host Portland State. The Bobcats were overwhelmed in the first half by the Vikings. At the intermission the score was 30-9 in favor of Portland.

All-American candidate Karen Strong popped in 20 points in the first half to lead the PSU charge. Montana State put on a determined charge in the last half holding K. Strong to just six points. However, they were never able to get closer than nine behind Portland. The final score was 50-41.

The first step toward the consolation game for MSU was a game with Central Washington. The game was typical of the games the Bobcats had played all season; good defense, strong rebounding play, and balanced scoring.

The Bobcats led 32-26 at the half and then added to their margin for a decisive 59-45 final.

Next in line for MSU was a faceoff with Washington State, a perennial power in the region. The contest was close throughout the first half. The Bobcats led with a score of 26-23 at the half. The Bobcats went to work in the second half and won going away 56-37 to put them into the consolation game for third and fourth place in the tournament. Western Washington was the opposition for the third place playoffs. In the early going, MSU held a slight lead which they maintained through the half. The halftime score was 32-26 with the Bobcats on top.

At the start of the second half, Western Washington tightened the game with a scoring spree. The game remained close as the two teams traded baskets throughout the game.

With the score knotted at 61 and nine seconds left on the clock, the Cats had a shot to bring them ahead but were unable to convert. This gave Western the ball.

The team from WWSU capitalized on two MSU fouls for three free throws in the last seconds for a 64-61 final. Montana State finished the year with an overall record of 22-5.

Bobcats bag biggie

BY CHRIS WALTERSKIRCHEN
PUBLISHED JANUARY 7, 1977

It took 79 years to officially prove to the rest of the nation, but on Dec. 11 the MSU Bobcats finally won the national championship. The win reaffirmed what Bobcat fans have been saying since the school first fielded a football team back in 1897, that the Cats are number one.

The Bobcats claimed the championship with a superbly played 24-13 win over the Akron Zips.

With a national television audience watching, the Cats took charge of the line of scrimmage. They took the ball on their first possession and marched to the Akron two before losing the ball on downs. The Defense held Akron in check in the first half when the only serious Akron threat was snuffed. The Cats' Greg Wiggs recovered a Zip's fumble at the MSU 33 on the last play of the first quarter.

On their second possession of the second quarter the Cats scored their first touchdown of the day. After the Bobcats had deftly moved down the field, Don Ueland floated a five yard pass to Ron McCullough to put the Cats on top to stay. The Cats added to their lead on their next possession. This time it was Paul Dennehy to Butch Danneberger for 12 yards, and the Bobcats went into the locker room with a 14-0 lead.

The Cats took the second half kickoff and moved impressively down the field in an effort to put the game out of reach. It was at this point the Akron defense began to stiffen up and the Cats were forced into a field goal attempt. Jeff Muri came on to boot a 35-yarder through the upright.

Akron got back into the contest late in the third quarter. They converted on two Bobcat fumbles and turned them into touchdowns. It was a 17-13 game with 13 minutes left on the clock.

The Zips' hopes were heightened when they got another Bobcat turnover at their 44 with only seven playing minutes left. On the second play of the Akron series, Les Leininger showed why he is an all-American, as he relieved the Akron quarterback of the football, (and for all intents and purposes the game,) and quickly pounced on the ball 33 yards from the Zips goal line.

On the ninth play of the Bobcats' drive after Leininger's recovery, Tom Kostuba went around end for seven yards and an Insurance score to make the final score 24-13.

Next action for the Bobcats will be May 21 when they host the always tough alumni, who will feature Keith Swenson, Don Ueland, Bryan Flaig, Ken Verlanic, Les Leininger, and Ralph Malloy.

Rodeo championship climaxes 25 years

BY BOB MILLER AND SANDY GAGNON

PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 22, 1972

Twenty-five years of Intercollegiate rodeo competition at Montana State University was climaxed in June when the men's team won the national team championship.

In addition to the team crown, MSU's men won four individual national championships. This was the largest number of individual titles ever won by a college in one season in the 25-year history of the College National Finals Rodeo. Bob Schall, Arlee, was the national champion bareback rider; Jock McDowell, Wisdom, the national champion saddle bronc rider; Dean Perkins, Miles City, national champion ribbon roper, and Lynn Perry, Cut Bank, national champion steer wrestler.

After a slow start in the spring the MSU men's team easily won the regional crown with 3,785 points to 2,987 points for Blue Mountain Community College of Pendleton, Oregon.

Winning the national team championship over the best inter-collegiate athletes in the nation wasn't easy. Some 215 contestants representing over 50 colleges and universities from the western states were competing. This was the third straight year that MSU hosted the five-day, six-performance College National Finals Rodeo.

MSU COMES FROM BEHIND TO WIN

MSU led at the end of the first go-around with points made by Bob Schall in bull riding, Pat Greany in ribbon roping, and Jock McDowell in saddle bronc riding.

The team trailed Eastern New Mexico University and Southern Colorado State College at the end of the second go-around but had four boys who had qualified to get another head of stock Saturday night. Schall marked 71 on his third bareback horse to place third in the final go-around and enough points to win the national championship in this event. Jock McDowell draw a tough horse to ride and was bucked off, but teammate Cleve Loney of Cascade marked 70 to split third and fourth. In the final go-around and placed second in the average on three head.

The MSU men did not score in calf roping and ribbon roping the final night but MSU's Lynn Perry, competing as a non-team member because an injury had limited him to one event, took points away from Eastern New Mexico University by placing second in the steer wrestling the final night and winning the average on three head. The team championship was to be decided in the bull riding, the last event of the rodeo. Although Schall was bucked off the famous Reg Kesler bull, Blue Frost, It did not alter team standings as riders from Southern Colorado and Eastern New Mexico did not mark high enough on their bulls to place. MSU won with 390 points to Colorado State's 370 and Eastern New Mexico with 331.

GIRLS' TEAM STRONG TOO

Although the MSU girls did not place at this year's finals rodeo, they have been strong contenders in past years. In 1971 an MSU girl, Jan Walter Wagner, Miles City, was the national all-around girls champion and also the champion break-away roper. In 1970, the girls' team tied for second in the nation. This year, the girls easily won the region with Jan Anderson of Wisdom leading the way as regional all-around girl and break-away roping champion. Two freshmen, Debbie Burghdoff of South Dakota and Cindy Bolen of Idaho, along with Jan, made up the team for this year's finals rodeo.

Montana State has one of the strongest rodeo programs in the nation with excellent support from the administration, students and rodeo fans.

Not only does rodeo require great athletic ability, but it also encourages academic success, leadership and responsibility. Rodeo has the highest scholastic requirements of any college sport. It is also the only sport which allows students to participate in the development and enforcement of rules and regulations under which they compete. Students serve on regional and national executive boards and have an equal voice with the faculty in all decisions involving the sport. A student serves as chairman of the national executive board.

Three faculty members work with rodeo activities at MSU. Bob Miller and Sandy Gagnon, both members of the animal and range science department, serve as director and coach, respectively. Bud Purdy, field-house manager, serves as advisor to the club on rodeo production.

MSU FACILITIES NATION'S BEST

The facilities for rodeo at Montana State University are the best in the nation. The fieldhouse is the largest and finest Indoor rodeo arena on any campus. The annual intercollegiate rodeo held each April draws a standing room only crowd for the Saturday night performance.

In recognition of the dedication and hard work of Rodeo Club members, plus the financial sacrifice each team member makes to compete in rodeo, the student body has provided an excellent travel budget. Mileage is paid for four outfits to haul students and horses to each rodeo and funds are also supplied for room and meals when the team travels. Team members must supply all their own equipment. Boys and girls competing in the timed events each have several thousand dollars invested in horses, trailers, and pickups.

Enthusiastic rodeo fans have supported the rodeo program, not only by their attendance at the regional and championship rodeo, but also in the scholarship program which the club maintains for the rodeo team. Along with individual cash donations by interested supporters, a number of ranchers donate a calf to the MSU Steer-A-Year Club. The MSU rodeo team shares in the profits made from the sale of these calves.

The 175-member MSU Rodeo Club is one of the largest and most active clubs on the campus. In addition to fielding the rodeo team, It provides practice stock for all club members who wish to try out for the team. The club also produces the annual MSU intercollegiate rodeo which last year drew 180 contestants from 18 different colleges and universities.

OPINION

Fighting Beck from Bozeman

BY MATT SMITH
PUBLISHED OCTOBER 28, 2010

On Aug. 28, the steps of the Lincoln Memorial in Washington D.C. supported the weight of a nation, born on the shoulders of a single man. An entire demographic of Americans sought the fundamental tenets of equality after years of dehumanizing oppression. On that August afternoon, that single man underwrote a revolution.

That August afternoon was 47 years ago. This year, Glenn Beck, not Martin Luther King Jr., presided over the national mall. In an irony that only a unique brand of idiocy could explain, Beck evoked the words of Dr. King and attempted to draw parallels between his rally calling for the restoration of America's "honor," and Dr. King's revolution.

At his rally, "Restoring America's Honor," Beck lectured a crowd of almost entirely middle-aged, middle-income white conservatives on the necessity of "restoring" conservative Christian values. The crowd, quite possibly one of the most ideologically, racially and culturally homogeneous bunch ever assembled on the National Mall, represented the precise antithesis of the crowd that was assembled in the same place 47 years prior.

Over the past few years, Beck has been able to re-brand the middle-aged, middle-income white demographic as the oppressed underdogs of America, while reality suggests the opposite. More middle-aged, middle-income white people possess seats of political and professional power than any other American demographic; they own more homes and have higher average incomes (Beck made an excess of $18 million last year, 237 times the average New York City income).

So when Glenn Beck evokes parallels between his "oppression and Martin Luther King Jr.'s, it can only be explained as something beyond idiocy. It must be insanity, and Beck is only symptomatic of a larger issue.

On Oct. 30, over 1,000 rallies around the nation will address the national schizophrenia that Beck embodies. Each satellite-rally is part of a larger movement that aims to counteract America's apparent departure from sanity.

The "Rally to Restore Sanity" is a national movement and brainchild of the Daily Show's comedian/commentator Jon Stewart. "If we had to sum up the political view of our participants in a single sentence... we couldn't. That's sort of the point," explained Stewart. The series of rallies across the nation promise to provide an alternative to the Beck-led Tea Party insanity that has dominated the 24-hour news cycle for the past few years.

"We're looking for the people who think shouting is annoying, counterproductive and terrible for your throat; who feel that the loudest voices shouldn't be the only ones that get heard."

Bozeman will host its own Rally to Restore Sanity from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Wild Joe's Cafe this Saturday. The Bozeman event is much more than a watch party, though. It is a rallying cry for all of those who are fed up with the nationwide embrace of the schizophrenic ideologies that Beck embodies so well.

Cell Phone Use Makes the World a Nicer Place

BY JAMIN CASEY
PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 29, 2005

I love cell phones. Love 'em. I just can't get enough of 'em. I love everything from the little buttons that light up, to the new LCD screens, to the multifarious ring tones they have nowadays. The only thing that I could possibly love more than cell phones, and trust me it's a toss up, is the people who use them.

I remember a time here at MSU when I would walk down the main mall and see hundreds of my fellow students walking to and from class. Sometimes they would be talking to each other, but none of them were talking on phones. Now all that has changed. When I walk down the main mall I am shocked if I see more than one or two students not talking on phones. I don't have to overhear loud conversations, now I get to overhear (not that I'm trying to overhear you understand) one side of a conversation. Well, they usually aren't real conversations. Mostly what I get to hear are things like, "Where are you now?" "Can you still hear me... Hello?" and my personal favorite, "Yeah I'm almost there. I'll see you in about five minutes. Oh there you are I can see you. Do you see me waving? I said, do you see me waving?"

Of course the main mall is not the only place that has been drastically improved by the advent of cell phones. Walking through the SUB I am always amused when someone right next to me says something charming like, "What the ~o@&'d ya do that for?" I turn, startled and a little only to discover that they weren't actually talking to me. It only sounded like they were talking to me because they were facing me while projecting their voice into a cell phone, probably due to poor connection. They were really only yelling an obscenity to a close friend, not a complete stranger. My ire quickly dies and I have a good laugh right there and then.

Plenty of times I am influenced by people talking on their cell phones when I can't even hear half of the conversation. I must admit that there's a fun little game I play when I'm driving around Bozeman in my Subaru. I call it "Try to Guess Which Insensitive Jerk is Talking on Their Cell Phone While Trying to Drive Through Traffic." It's a clever little title I came up with on my own. Here's how I play; as I drive I watch for the people who make the biggest, dumbest mistakes while driving that almost get themselves and, potentially, any number of other people killed. When I spot someone doing that, I know I've found one. I sing out that I've found an "Insensitive Jerk!"

Some other people play this game, or one like it, but when they find a Jerk they indicate it with a special hand signal using only one finger. I don't do this because I always need both of my hands to properly operate my motor-vehicle.

Before too long this game gets old, there are just so many Insensitive Jerks out there! I was forced to complicate it a little, just to make it more interesting. Now, when I find a Jerk I assign a point value to him or her according to just how Insensitive s/he is. I get one point if the only thing s/he is doing is talking on the cell phone, two points if the radio is playing as well, three points if there is a radio and food involved, four if extra passengers are also interacting with the Jerk simultaneously, and a whopping five points if s/he is talking on the phone, changing the radio station, eating a burrito, putting on make-up (there are guys who do this too) while reacting to other friends in the car and drunk. Don't laugh, there have been some Saturday evenings that I've had 50 point drives. Oh the fun!

Perhaps my favorite emergence of cell phones happens when I see two people together, one or both talking on their phone. Many times there will be a couple of friends walking, at the Mall or downtown, and one or both will be coordinating with another friend where to meet. That's pretty benign, though it does result in more of the funny half conversations, "Yeah we're down at Barnes and Noble, where are you? Oh well then I should be able to... there you are. Yeah I'm walking that way right now. See you in about ten seconds." Of course there are other times when the two people walking together are, let's just say, walking hand-in-hand while their other hands, respectively, are occupied with cell phones.

What could be greater? They don't even have to wait until their date is over in order to tell their friends about everything that happened. That way they won't forget any details. These funny couples can also seen frequenting restaurants.

They're so cute, sitting across from each other, letting their food get cold, not looking at each other, talking loud enough to be heard over each other on their respective cell phones. It is sometimes sad to see one person talking the phone while their date sits neglected. There is actually good potential in a situation like this for the neglected date to become upset, or to feel, well, neglected.

I wish I could talk to the person who is on the phone (of course I can't unless they have waiting) and tell them to reassure their date, to tell them that, despite the fact that they may seem to be insensitive they are justified in doing so. After all, it's not like they are talking to some other person, in person, they are on their cell phone and we all know that cell phones take precedence. You gotta answer your phone. It's not that you love people around you less, it's just that you love your cell phone more.

There is a song that comes mind, "I love technology, but not as much as you see, still I love technology, Always and forever, Always and forever ..."

Westboro Baptist Church: Silence is Not an Option

BY PAT HESSMAN
PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 6, 2013

The Phelps family is coming to town. That's right, America's favorite hate group, the Westboro Baptist Church (WBC), is gracing Bozeman with their heinous-yet-first-amendment-protected presence. No doubt you've heard this already. The Bozeman Daily Chronicle has reported it, several groups have planned counter-protests and the topic has raged across student's Facebook profiles. Even our university president made a special comment about their visit. In sheer amount of buzz, the visit by the Westboro Baptist Church has more people talking than Yann Martel speaking at Convocation.

With so many talking about the issue, different philosophies have prevailed about how to respond. Three camps have emerged. The first consists of those who believe the Phelps family should be counter-protested loudly and vibrantly with the intended goal of trolling the protesters. The second group also believes in counter-protest, but a silent, peaceful demonstration instead. Lastly, some believe the Church should simply be ignored when they come to Bozeman and the greatest way to demean the WBC is to give no acknowledgement whatsoever.

Logically, the third option cannot work. There are too many people, myself included, who have already decided to counter-protest the WBC and are highly unlikely to change our minds. This is more than just a practical impossibility, however. There is a moral imperative, if you believe in the cause of LGBT-equality, to stand against the WBC.

Consider this: Ever since the Church gained national spotlight for picketing of the funeral of Matthew Shepherd, they have become the face of hatred and homophobia. There are larger and more powerful organizations promoting homophobia, but no group outdoes the Phelps family in notoriety. When the Church rolls into a city, whether it be for a soldier's funeral or the Oscars, resistance always gathers. The opposition creates hope for those hurt by the Church's statements. To not protest them would be to send the message that their bile is tolerated. Our silence would imply consent, but it won't happen under the watch of Bozeman's counter-protesters.

In this way, the Church has become a symbol of hope for the very thing they hate the most. Each counter-protest shows there is hope for equality in that part of the country. It goes beyond simply protesting the WBC, however. The multitude of counter-protests sends a message to everyone that hatred will not be tolerated. In Montana especially, this is a message that must be spread. Remember that voters in this state voted to outlaw gay marriage in 2004 and only this year repealed its antisodomy statute. This show of support for equality and condemnation of hatred will prove that times are changing in Montana, a message all too important to drive home.

So when the WBC arrives on Sept. 9, and if you stand behind the cause of equality, please join me and the many other protesters who will oppose these agents of hatred. Send the message to the Church, the community, the state and the entire country that hatred will not be tolerated in Bozeman.

Also, just in case the WBC doesn't come to Bozeman, remember this: God hates no-shows.

Good Fences Make Terrible Neighbors

BY RACHEL HERGITT
PUBLISHED OCTOBER 12, 2006

Maybe the grass is a little greener on our side of the border. One cannot argue that the wages and the quality of life by any known index are higher in the United States than they are in Mexico. As Americans, we like to promote our dream and the American ideal, but when it becomes time to share that vision with a group of people who may need something to believe in, we balk and slither away. The American Dream is then apparently only for people who are already citizens of the United States, or those few we let in our borders legally. You cannot aspire to be anything more than you are if you are not part of the select few.

On Wednesday, Oct. 4, President Bush signed the latest in homeland security funding bills providing $1.2 billion to build a fence on the U.S. Mexico border. While Bush signed the bill into law last week, the idea of a more secure barrier between the U.S. and Mexico was actually started under Clinton.

No matter which of our political parties started the process, the idea of spending that much money in American taxpayer dollars on such a project is absurd. Building a wall between nations has never created more peaceable relations. It is a definite but fallible separation, used for the most part to keep out an inferior minority deemed as such by a more powerful majority group.

Walls were used in the ghettos of Warsaw and in the concentration camps in World War II to confine the Jews. The Poles and Germans used the same reasoning then – the Jews were stealing their jobs and using their resources, and allowing them free access to the country would bring down the economy.

Israel has turned this idea around on another faith, using walls to fence in the Palestinians in Gaza and the West Bank. In Israel these walls are known as the "apartheid walls," splitting families and creating a massive bureaucratic mess of border checkpoints and access passes. Literally, the word apartheid simply means separation in Afrikaans, but the connotation is clear. The South African Apartheid was a government policy of racial segregation that lasted from 1948 to 1991. The apartheid walls in Israel separate the privileged Jewish people from the Muslims who inhabit the same tiny plot of land, but by nature of their religion are undeserving of the benefits of Israeli citizenship.

The Berlin Wall separating East and West Germany from 1961 to 1989 was built in the midst of the Cold War, but the idea behind it was much the same as our current border control aspirations. The wall was built to stop the economic drain and migration of workers from East to West Berlin, essentially cutting off the poorer side from any economic opportunities available to their closest neighbors. Sound familiar?

Each wall is simply a deceitful physical manifestation of exclusionist policy; each was built in the guise of safety and security, but exposes seemingly corrupt economic strategy designed to stagnate social and/or ethnic classes.

We hide behind fences, shutting out our neighbors instead of embracing them. We use laws and initiatives in the guise of national security to promote supremacist ideals.

The United States is not by any means alone. India erected a barrier along its border with Pakistan beginning in 1989. Saudi Arabia built a barrier along disputed border territory between itself and Yemen, territory in which oil was discovered in 1990. Interestingly, both Saudi Arabia and India are both openly against any sort of barrier in Israel. Other such barriers exist between North and South Korea, Morocco and the Western Sahara, different communities in Northern Ireland, Thailand and Malaysia, and in Cyprus. Each one does in fact separate two different groups of people, but does little to foster an increasingly important international dialogue to promote international social interests.

International borders are usually established boundaries, and countries have the right to defend them, but as Mexican President Vicente Fox said last week, "There is no vision about the meaning of immigration, about what it can produce for both countries. The need to handle [immigration] orderly, legally, and with respect for them and for us, but they [the United States] have not understood it that way."

Expert researchers in both Mexico and the U.S. have, according to the Associated Press, determined that this initiative will not curb the flow of migrant workers, but simply force them to take different, often more dangerous, routes.

No matter which countries or group are involved, the idea of separation or security barriers challenges progressive social ideals of human rights, creating increasing points of contention across our globe that is already drowning in political struggles. As citizens of the United States, North America, and the world, we should tell our government that another fence is not the answer. Use the $1.2 billion allocation for the greater good, not to guarantee economic inferiority of a neighboring nation.

SUPERHERO MOVIE BUBBLE

The true greatest supervillain

BY PAT HESSMAN
PUBLISHED JUNE 6, 2013

Remember when “Spider-Man,” “Batman Begins” and “X-Men” hit theaters? Wasn’t it awesome to finally see your favorite superheroes being faithfully portrayed on the big screen? However, when you were watching Wolverine eviscerate some poor bastard, you probably weren’t thinking about these films as a sustainable business model — you just enjoyed the big budget action.

Some could argue the superhero movie genre has reached its apex. Last year, “The Avengers” and “The Dark Knight Rises” represented both the biggest and most popular franchises the genre had to offer. After Bruce Wayne hung up the Batman costume and Tony Stark punted a nuke into another dimension to stave off an alien invasion, we were all wondering where the genre could go from there.

Some industry insiders and moviegoers believe a bubble is coming. Matthew Vaughn, director of “X-Men: First Class,” believed the mutant reboot to be his last chance to make a superhero movie before the bubble burst. Cracked.com recently set the internet ablaze with a columnist’s claim that the superhero genre is an impending bubble about to burst, a sentiment Esquire also suggested. The idea is that the films are getting too big, too expensive and too risky to continue making in the future, a feeling most likely fueled by terrible memories of Bat-Nipples. The evidence against this, however, is recent box-office revenues. The receipts indicate that the superhero genre will only keep moving forward. “Iron Man 3” landed on May 3 to once again blow the box-office up with a $1.1 billion total box-office haul. “Iron Man 3” now joins esteemed company, as both “The Dark Knight Rises” and “The Avengers” grossed over a billion worldwide.

The superhero genre is also one of the first genres to break into the lucrative Chinese movie industry — the second largest box-office market in the world — with “Iron Man 3” almost being a co-production with Chinese company DMG Entertainment. The Superman reboot “Man of Steel” and “Thor: The Dark World” continue to drum up hot anticipation with each new trailer. Tony Stark and Superman’s new adventures show that there is indeed life after “The Dark Knight Rises” and “Avengers,” as there’s an “Avengers” sequel set to release in 2015. Yet, sometimes history has shown the moment there truly is a bubble is when people claim there isn’t a bubble. If there is a Krypton exploding-scale crash and burn coming for the superhero film genre, perhaps the best thing to do is to enjoy it while it lasts.

Student’s guide to film awards

BY VANESA NAIVE
PUBLISHED JANUARY 26, 2012

On Tuesday, Jan. 23, the much anticipated list of Academy Award nominations was released to the public. There has been speculation growing the past couple of months on the choices — especially with industry insider awards ramping up the season, which officially ends with the Academy Awards on Feb. 26. Films heading the list include Midnight in Paris, Girl with the Dragon Tattoo, Moneyball, War Horse, The Artist and Hugo (with a whopping 11 nominations). Even comedy flick Bridesmaids garnered a best supporting actress for Melissa McCartney and best original screenplay nomination.

How exactly are these nominations selected, and what are good indicators of winners of the golden statues? The Director’s Guild of America, the labor union that covers directors, assistant directors, stage managers and production associates, claims that the Outstanding Directorial Achievement in Feature Film is a good leeway into winning the Best Director Oscar. Only six films have been the exception. The Producer’s Guild Award also claims that the Darryl F. Zanuck Producer of the Year Award is a strong indicator on who will win the Best Picture Oscar.

The 2012 winner was silent-movie comeback, The Artist. The winners of the past five years have won the Best Picture Oscar. Academy Awards are selected in a similar process. The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Science voting members are divided into different branches, each representing a different discipline in film production, which the Academy invites to join. Actors and actresses make up 22 percent of the Academy. Members of the various branches nominate those in their respective fields, while all members may submit nominees for Best Picture. The winners are then determined by a second round of voting in which all members are then allowed to vote in most categories. The only exceptions are Foreign Film, Documentary and Animated Feature Film, in which a special screening committee nominates the films.

Into the Groove: 80s Dance-O-Rama

BY KAREN WILSON
PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 15, 2011

What are you doing tonight? If your answer was, "I don't know," and you're reading this Exponent hot off the press, get ready for Into the Groove, the Students Against Sexual Assault's (SASA) '80s dance party in the SUB Ballrooms tonight, Sept. 15, at 8:00 p.m. Missy O'Malley will DJ and it's free.

The event will feature a sweet fog machine, dance-friendly lighting, a bar for those ages 21+ and free food in an adjoining room featuring sponsors' booths. There will also be an 80s-themed photo booth manned by MSU photo students, where you can get your very own 5x7 photo for $5. Duplicates will be just $2, so make sure to get a big crew together and make it an unforgettable night. This is the perfect opportunity to dress in your tightest, brightest spandex, put on some leg warmers and an off-the-shoulder T-shirt and dance the night away in serious style. And no, professors will not be running rampant trying to spy on their students outside of the classroom.

Dressing up in 80s attire isn't your thing, you say? So why should you, an MSU student, go to Into the Groove? "First off, there are going to be some serious decorations," said Hannah Wahlert, one of the event organizers. "Second, it's within walking distance if you live on or near campus and third, I can't say enough about how awesome Missy is." SASA's Alanna Sherstad agreed: "Missy is like the quintessential 80s DJ." "People should go to Into the Groove because it's a convenient, free, safe, fun environment," said Elizabeth Wilmerding, SASA's Publicity Manager. This is what SASA is all about: making sure people have fun while in a safe, risk-free environment.

Each attendee will get a free raffle ticket upon entering, and more can be purchased for an opportunity to win cool prizes, including passes to Norris Hot Springs, movie tickets and tickets to an upcoming play at the Equinox Theatre. To use the words of student Hannah Safford, "SASA's condom fashion show is always such a blast; why wouldn't something with neon clothing and Pat Benetar be any less fabulous?" See you on the dance floor!

'Swan Lake' returns to Bozeman

BY VANESSA NAIVE
PUBLISHED APRIL 26, 2012

Last weekend, the Livingston Yellowstone Ballet Co. and Bozeman Main Street Dance Co. performed the critically acclaimed classic ballet "Swan Lake" at the Willson Auditorium. Modern viewers might recognize the music composed by Tchaikovsky and the ballet from the recent Oscar-nominated movie "The Black Swan."

"Swan Lake" tells the story of Odette, the lead ballerina, a princess turned into a swan by an evil sorcerer's curse. Only an oath of true love can break the enchantment. Prince Siegfried, the lead male ballet dancer, falls in love with the beautiful princess, who is transformed into a human at night. The ballet tells of their trials.

According to artistic director Kathleen Rakela, "Swan Lake" hasn't been produced in Montana in over 10 years. The production was joined by two principal dancers from the Colorado Ballet: Sharon Wehner as the beautiful Odette and bewitching Odile, and Dmitry Trubchanov as Prince Siegfried. Bozeman's Chris Taddiken donned the role of the evil Von Rothbart.

The Sunday matinee included a special kids performance, choreographed by 11-year-old Fiona Lee. She starred as Odette/Odile, while 18-year-old Parsifal Pittendorf of Livingston played the prince. The children's performance was cute, although raw and a bit clumsy, but it wasn't advertised well. While I understand the need to showcase the children's abbreviated performance, I did feel very confused on why it took an hour to get to the actual performance. A simple "for those who would like to see the main performance, come at 3 p.m." would have alleviated confusion, and would have eliminated seeing a double performance of the same show.

Aside from that, the performances were well executed, and the story easy to follow even for those not immersed in the ballet world. While the ending was much happier than the original ballet, the beautiful costuming, staging and dancing communicated the longing and the heartbreak of the swan princess.

SEX PONENT

Embracing Identity

PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 17, 2015

In a time when laws surrounding the lesbian, gay and bisexual (LGB) community are becoming clearer, granting the community greater social and legal standing, the transgender community continues to lag behind in recognition and legal protection. Transgender is an umbrella term encompassing those who do not identify with their biological sex. It includes such identifications as transsexual (transgender identifiers who surgically change their sex) agender, androgynous, intersex, cross dresser and many others.

Cassidy Medicine Horse, a local writer and activist as well as founder of TransMSU — a support group for transgender students — defined transgender as "a personal understanding of who you are as a gendered individual that is not limited by the biological and social imperatives associated with one's birth. Self recognition as gay, lesbian, or bisexual addresses sexual predisposition.

Self recognition as transgender is a declaration of selfhood."

The trans community does not have the protection offered by hate crime laws. Hate crimes include singling someone out based on race, ethnicity, sexuality, and other prejudices. Medicine Horse mentioned that legislation is being introduced in the next year that would stop discrimination on the basis of gender presentation or identity nationwide. Many, however, do not take trans violence seriously, even where it is against the law. Medicine Horse stated, "the reality is how laws are enforced is of equal importance as to what the law is." And it doesn't help that the trans community is "the marginalized of the marginalized."

While the LGB community is pushed to the side less often, the trans community continues to be ignored and silenced. While lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) people are all included within one acronym, transgender differs from LGB in that it's the only one of the four that relates to gendered identity of the self, not sexual attraction. Medicine Horse commented, "the 'T' in LGBT got tacked on as an afterthought. The singular commonality between LGB and T is that none are products of choice."

After her own transition, Medicine Horse lost lifelong friends. She believes people use labels because they're easy, and become uncomfortable when others change and leave their designated boxes. They toss them out as mistakes, rather than simply expanding the box they've made. Medicine Horse desires a box that "just says 'human.' Build on that, accept that. You're human, with all the innuendos and additions and subtractions and wonderful things and horrible things that that term involves, and that's okay."

When asked what advice she would give to those considering transition, Medicine Horse said, "Be very sure of what you're doing, go very slow, think it through. There is nothing easy about it." Transitioning is difficult, expensive and you will lose friends, though you may find others in unlikely places. Medicine Horse advised reading, doing your own research and talking to those who have transitioned themselves. "You cannot do it by yourself." She stated that whatever is going on, whatever problems you have, changing gender will not cure that. "Those problems are still going to be with you. Just because you transition gender doesn't mean you have this instantaneous cure for all those problems."

In discussing her own transition, Medicine Horse said she's much happier now. Whatever was happening before her transition, there was always a sadness, a heartache. She is now completely comfortable in her own skin. Someone's advice to her was to be comfortable being who she is, that she has to own it. To those who value the designated boxes, Medicine Horse said, "the only box we fit into is human. Stop trying to put trans people in your box and then wonder why they don't fit."
